

Hello world,

8-29-12

I'm just checking in to be sure you are still there. I've been hearing rumors that your demise is imminent.

Strange how all thru the years, people have predicted the end of the world in one catastrophe or another, and the supporting arguments are generally rational if not quite believable.

Yet, here we are continuing to march forward. We rebuild after the destruction of horrible wars or the woes of mother nature. We are wiser, stronger and more unified after all of these calamities, that is when we shine and show the true potential of our heart.

Some one very wise, and quite special to me, once said "gold never shines so brightly as it does once it passes through the flame." I have found this to be true in my life. I have travelled a long burning road to becoming the man I am today, and now at 50 I can look at my eyes in the mirror and know that I have found peace.

This is what I wish for everyone,

What would you do if the world were going to end? Would you run in every direction panicking over batteries and canned veggies?

Or would you look around at the beauty all around you, would you smile at your loved ones and let them feel the love you have for them?

I live my life as if each day is the only one I have, my only real goal is to be at peace, to enjoy the day in the best possible way I can.

I do my best to avoid drama and heart ache, I do not wish to contribute any more negative ripples in this life I would much rather enjoy what I have, a few good friends that I love dearly, my family, and of course all of you - I may not change the world, but I've changed my world and my place in it and I think that's all any of us can do.

enjoy your day, enjoy your life - THAT is the true gift.

Love you all.

 Danny
