

So, I'm back one more time... I've gotten into a little trouble in the last year, been moved to solitary and back. I decided I was tired of the circles I've ran in for so long, so I've re-enrolled in school in an attempt to straighten my life out... I previously took college classes for welding technology, computer, advanced english & communication and lower applied mathematics, now I am in electrician class, studying residential electric, commercial & industrial electric... the math is advanced, so the studying on that continues past the basic trigonometry level.

I've taken the (National Career Readiness Certification) exam and am awaiting my results... I passed the EPA

LEED Green Builders certification exam. I took 2 OSHA courses - and have a lifetime certification on those safety course scores. I am enrolled in a more in-depth computer class and a study course on electronics/integrated circuits... I plan to study HVAC before I finish the electric course...

I have 18 months of courses left and around 4 years of prison time. After the 18 months are finished I am unsure what to do next, am less sure what to do when my prison time is over...

I fear being a total failure...

I have a poor connection with my family, though I try to repair it...

Over the years of my incarceration the communication had began to fail, and worsened with time... maybe someday I'll figure it out... I made it easier for friends, family and penpals to reach me, cheaper and safer as well, by getting e-mail... anyone can go to JPay.com and e-mail me Daniel Baker #202746 Kentucky State Reformatory... I have only 2 contacts in my list right now but maybe that will change...

I need people in my life to keep me focused positively on the future...

Sincerely
