

A Man's Words From The Lost World

Being incarcerated for the last 17 years as I pay my debt to society, I have learned that I am far from perfect and that the bad and good are "almost" even. My character seems to have a natural ability to attract people, and I am comfortable just being me. In spite of my past, I have finished school and still pursue furthering my education, as well as making myself a better person by completing some self-help programs to broaden my horizons.

Unfortunately I'm in prison and the fact that who I was at 17-18 years old will always affect the way people see the man I am. I will always regret my past, but that chapter is done. I've worked really hard to build myself a pretty good future, even under these circumstances. I want to do everything differently doing new things and exploring new ideas in my life with new people. That's why I'm blogging. I've found through my journey of personal discover that what's left is whatever one is willing to fight for. Therefore, I am just hoping for more as I continue to reach out to be and for something better. I can honestly say I'll never do anything that I can't look back on and smile or have anyone around me again that makes me worse instead of better. If you understand my palate give me one chance to prove you wrong about what's possible. Along the way I've learned women know immediately if they'll get along with a man or not so I will stop writing for now.... Thank God for a woman's intuition. Smile