

Hey, first off I would like to thank Brewster for his kind remarks, dude it really does help knowing that someone out there is reading what I write and is concerned about my safety. The administration still refuses to do anything to help me but I refuse to give up. I would like to spend some time on stereotypes. I am a person which defies societies desire to classify everyone. I am a big guy, not as heavy as I used to be, during my football years and for a long time after, I weighed between 290 to 300 lbs. I love sports but I am not a jock. I never thought athletic ability made me better than anyone else. I have no problem getting physical to protect myself or someone I love, hell I will even help someone who is unable or unwilling to help themselves. I hate bullies, I believe they are cowards at heart. I seriously enjoy learning new things, I feel if you don't learn something everyday it is a day wasted. However I don't fit as a nerd. I love the outdoors, I grew up in Kentucky so I take great pleasure in camping, fishing and hiking. I enjoy smoking weed but I don't do it until late at night or the weekends and I don't do it everyday so I don't think you could call me a pothead. I really enjoy hard rock, metal, punk and alternative. I go out, clubs, concerts, parties but I enjoy spending time with friends and also, so I'm no party animal. I look like a mean S.D.B. but I'm not afraid to show my emotions. I write poetry and short stories and novels and I'm trying my hand at lyrics. I believe in magic. I've studied Wicca, Druidism, Native American Shamanism but I'm not a pacifist or a tree hugger. Finally I'm gay, I love guys, everything about em but there is nothing feminine about me. As a matter of fact most gay dudes don't believe I'm gay when they first meet me. To be honest, I have never had an openly gay lover, I usually end up with bi dudes who are closeted. Most chicks don't believe I'm gay either. I just think it's strange how most people try to force everyone into some type of classification. I'm proud of the fact that I'm weird or an outcast but I would kinda like to figure out what it takes to get the gay community to accept that I'm gay. You all take care of yourselves.

Unnoticed

The water flows from me,
My tears will not be seen,

Rainbows

I look around me,
My world wrapped in a rainbow,
Our hope eternal.
