

No matter how often or how long ago I made the mistake, it's never too late to correct it.

Even a tentative step toward light is better than remaining in darkness. Mistakes, including persistent ones, don't define me unless I just want to believe they do. Although many of my patterns have been long term and perverse, no one can succeed in recreating their spiritual self. Making the same mistake does not justify feeling hopeless. Nothing prevents me from changing course. What small step can be taken now? This day — in fact, even this life — is not lost as long as there is still a moment left to begin again.
