I was on C-SPAN last night, watching the Red Carpet, for the Annual White House Correspondence Dinner, when on the bottom of the screen there was an alert flash, says that, Moammar Gadhafi's, son had been killed in a NATO air attack.

Why? What gives NATO the right to go into a sovereign country and do that? I understood, or tried to understand the need to stop the mass killings there but what gives NATO, the right to systematically kill a member of that government?

I just blogged on this, so I will try to be brief, but I don't get it. Is the NATO led attack there for the people, or the oil? If that is the case, then I can name several other countries NATO should be in.

America and NATO backed the Taliban against Russia, they backed Iraq against Iran, they rolled with the moderates in Iran, in which the Iranian government at that time helped america get into Afganistan, in 2001, and america turned their backs on that government. Then the hard liners moved in with a very anti-western slogan. Where is america's loyalties? Everytime america and her allies have moved into the middle east, it has not ended good for this country. When will america get it? There are so many ways to end conflicts without violence, or bullying tactics, but in order to be trusted you must come to the table with clean hands. Are america's hands clean?

What does a parent do when their children are killed? They want blood. Just ask someone from President's Reagan, old administration. Will Moammar Gadhafi, attack? If so, how? He is not shy, and he is not know to run from violence, either. So will he accept the death of one of his son's now, when he couldn't back then? Yes, america is strong, and has a very excellent military, but so did Hitler. However, if you stretch your military to then you leave yourself open for anything to happen.

I will try not to blog about this situation again, but we should not be in libya, nor should NATO. Every country has civil unrest, let them handle their own affairs. If that was america, and other countries launched attacks against us, we would retaliate in kind. So do not be shocked if Libya, finds a way to shed american blood, either.
