To all the people that took the time to show interest in anything that I had to say, I thank you and greatly appreciate you. Today I woke up with a nice amount of admiration for life, just feeling thankful that the situation that I am currently in is only temporary. Because in this place I surround myself with a lot of great men who made simple mistakes that altered the rest of their lives.

I hope anybody that reads this that knows a good man behind bars takes this as encouragement to pick up a pen and write him a letter or get in their car and go visit them because they need it.

In this life you have good people and you have bad people. Then you have us, the good people that made a bad decision once or twice that has to be condemned for it for the rest of their lives. We're only human so why should we be alienated for a mistake.

I am not justifying murder, but what about the men that committed homicide to protect their family and their own life. Which I think any sensible person would commit if they were put in that predicament. Our government commits murders and does what's necessary to any extent for our safety so what's the difference?

Every situation that leads to homicide doesn't leave time for someone to call the police and wait for them to come commit murder themselves. And if your put in a situation where its your life or the next persons life then human nature always engages in self preservation.

I just want people to know that life is not easy on the inside, especially when your being judged by a society that would do the same thing or some thing similar if put in that same position.

Life is a beautiful thing, and I hope the people that are blessed to enjoy it are appreciative of it because everyone doesn't get that opportunity.

Shout out to LeBron James and the Miami Heat for taking it all the way last night over Dallas, and respect to all the beautiful women of the world that respects themselves and others around them. ~~Strength~~ Strength to all the men in the world that's forced to endure conflict and adversity at this time, keep ya head up and I'll catch you on the rebound.
