

Motivation

In a position like mine, it's hard to introduce your self and still surpass the opinion that's already imposed on you and make a good impression at the same time. But me personally, I never count myself out and I figured having a chance to share my thoughts and perspectives on a few things was enough to have me willing to give it a try.

For those that don't know, I'm currently serving time at a maximum security prison in Lucasville, OH, I'm 24 and I am from Columbus. I consider myself blessed for being able to say I made it to the end of my term with a little over a year left to finish until I am released with a second chance at success.

But enough about myself, since this is my first blog I wanted to dedicate this one to the world who deserve way more than they are receiving at this time. Let this be considered motivation for them to keep striving to be better and to just keep doing what you're doing because eventually you'll be granted the appreciation you deserve.

To the women out there that's willing to sacrifice satisfaction for themselves in order to make sure your families needs are taken care of you will always have my respect. Also I share my appreciation to the women of the world that spend their whole life never settling for less to exceed the expectations of their peers. And where would men like myself be without the love and support that we receive from strong women with beautiful hearts that would rather temporarily be physically alone in order to completely support their other half due to incarceration. Let this be motivation to never change and to keep going, because you will always be cherished and appreciated.

To the woman in the world who chose to stay home and pay your contributions to your family by filling your household with your love and comfort, I salute you and respect you also because it takes a strong woman to sacrifice anything beneficial physically, spiritually or financially in order to dedicate your time to your family and their needs with just your touch.

Now I didn't want to write too much because this was my first time and I didn't want my readers to lose interest before I gave them a chance to gain it. So with that said, to all of the Mothers, daughters, ~~wives~~ wives, sisters and just friends I dedicate this to you with hopes that you receive some form of motivation from it to keep going. I promise to give you passion and truth and hope you continue to reveal on.
