

Good people

I am always amused by how some people will claim that they are good people then turn around and live a life that contradicts that whole statement. A good person does not intentionally hurt people let alone their own children. If I told you that if you acted a certain way it would hurt your child would you keep doing it? If not then I guess that makes you a good person. Well what about those that don't care if they hurt their children because they feel like they have the right to? I know what is he talking about? Well for instance lets take a mother who takes their child away from their father for no real reason other than their own selfish desires or just to hurt the father. Is that a good woman? That's sad right? Well how about the fact that they don't even feel bad that they are actually not only taking a child away from it's father, but a father away from their own child. The thing God only gives them one of they take away. I will leave you with a statement to look up, MALIGNANT NARCISSISM...
