

"Makes it official then"?

Hilarious. Let's see how you Limeys like this one; For every action there is a ... CONSEQUENCE! Newton's first law has officially been invalidated. Go ahead, ask anybody; they'll say "Newton who?" Everything's "political" now; "political-this", "political-that"; I know it's hard to believe but the "talking-heads" don't want to say "political-reaction", (even though they never pass up the opportunity to say the word "political".) So, they just did away with Newton's Law altogether!

Blimey!

7.30.11

"Police are checking to see if one person is responsible for the attacks"

- 850 KOA (Denver)

(read: police are hoping that only one person is responsible for the attacks)

Found something interesting in the law library; guerilla warfare; use of sporadic, irregular tactics such as sabotage and harassment.

(Modern Dictionary for the legal profession, 2001)

I thought the use of the word "harassment" was very interesting. You don't often see that word being used in that way.

(correction: earlier I said that CNN reported that Mubarak's influence was being felt everywhere, even though he was in hiding. That was NPR)