I love a woman's intuition! It's so keen and accurate. It's always encouraging to hear from a self-intellect who is susceptible to your words and can sense your true feelings. I have been hurt in the past. And I've been through every emotion that comes with it: Tears, self-pity, anger, fear of being alone, is it my fault?, beer binges, more tears and then acceptance. And yes, I found that after being by myself. It teaches you not to jump in head first, not knowing that in the end, the pool of the relationship was empty. Now your hurt and left confined to your mental thoughts. But this is a valuable lesson. You learn not to toy with anyone's feelings because you're aware of how bad it hurts. It's the equivalent of getting kicked in the stomach by a soccer player. Ouch! And gasping for a ying to your yang to give you mouth to mouth and restore your breath of life. I guess that's why they call new relationships a breath of fresh air! Thanks for your words.
