

Greetings,

Every 3½ minutes in America, a child is diagnosed with some form of cancer. The cruelest ones fall squarely upon the lives who couldn't deserve them less.

Cancer will touch the lives of every single living person at one time or another, either by directly afflicting them, a friend, or a loved one. No one is spared, young or old.

As painful memories often yield creativity and insight, www.deathrowinmate.org introduces "convicts against cancer", a series of honorary tributes to the living memories of all of those whom have endured the ravages of this destroyer of life --- those whose bravery and dignity continue to inspire us.

The face of this blossoming venue belongs to a precious five year old girl who gave her life to Wilms Cancer (kidney tumors) in 1998. Nina was the only child of one of DRI's founders. Through Nina's memorial pages, we've chosen to celebrate her life with sentimental gestures of love while working to cover the little balding heads of every single child who has or will lose their hair to chemotherapy.

Convicts Against Cancer needs your help. We've committed ourselves to supporting life and research while standing united against the disease of a thousand faces, enlisting participation from like-minded folks who're ready to exchange trade links, those who'll blog about us, and others who'll get proactive in the cause itself.

We need people, groups, and companies who'd willingly donate colorful, kid-friendly knitted beanie caps and scarves. If you know someone like this, please forward this email.

Visit "convicts against cancer" on Facebook and come by to see our first new honorary memorials at the above-listed website.

Out of infancy, we intend to bring this deserving effort to life. Please let your heart lead the way.

Thank You
