

①

Something like Loving Blind

10/15/11

I was listening to Waco 100 and when they played George Strait's old song "You look so good in love", I thought not me. When they played "I've been loving blind" by Clint Black I felt like, "That's me!" You know with Daddy owning a couple bars as I was growing up I got used to what I call drinking songs. My down with any music, but nothing does for a breaking heart than a good ol' country song.

What country song best describes recent events in my life... "White Lie", and "Whiskey Girl" seems to fit best. There's a couple more, just got to get the correct names, then I'll put them up.

I woke up this morning with the thoughts of my freedom overwhelming my mind. I wonder what my family is doing today. If I was still close to them like I used to be I'd be going home to a smoked brisket, talk of the races coming up on Friday night, & good ol' country boys & girls. Yea, we are a simple family. I think about the times I've missed being the daughter to my daddy that it could've been. I swear I'll be better this time. That's a promise I'll take to my grave.

②

I've been trying my best not to dwell on the pain of broken heart. Sometimes it's hard to see past my pain. I try, but it gets harder everyday. One day, I know, it'll get easier. Just takes time.

I heard from my friends to keep my head up. They don't seem to get it. It's just not that easy. Everything in my life, has happened has been ^{that}

③

Like a whirl wind of impossibilities.
Yet, it's all happening.

My friends are happy for me & I am happy I'm going home. Just wish I wasn't walking out of there so broken.
Oh well, I'll have to suck it up!

I'm trying

When I hear the song, "I've Been Loving Blind" I'll forever remember doing so on the Hobby Unit. And I'll remember that I choose to not allow my broken heart dictate my actions.
Just going through the aftermath of a broken heart.

God is a good God, I won't give up on Him.