Being here, you have more chances than you might elsewhere to see the world as it is. Instead of through the shadows you cast upon it.

When I have night mares of him. He was a sociopath. Neither logic or ordinary emotions served as a foundation for his actions. Power and the pleasure he got from exerting it over others.

Drugs and alcohol were his motivations.

On these nights, I wake with a sense of loss so terrible that I would prefer not ever to wake again. But I do. I breathe and I go on. It's what my sons would want me to do.

Would expect me to do. I have a destiny that I must learn. I live to learn it.

It's not for me to judge his soul, no matter how much I might want to. My choices are measured against my own soul, not against the stain on his.

Most people live in a black & white world. All or nothing. While in here you must face a world of greys. Because a streak of cold pure survival runs up your spine everyday. It is never easy to know the real path in such a place. You must know & trust your own heart.

Forbidden to Remember, Terrified to Forget. Do you hear me?
Do you see me? Do you know me?
Does anyone care?
