

A Response to Grace's Post

The first point I would like to cover is to express my gratitude for your comments. I am thankful to see my blogs are being read. Lately I am using my time and energy in other areas. I neglect to write because it seems futile. The effort and expense involved challenges my limitations. I often wonder what value the blogs have. It leads me to choose to expend my resources elsewhere. Your response gives me new enthusiasm.

I am excited about addressing your questions. This project will receive my attention in the near future. You gave me a great gift just in time for Christmas. I am greatly encouraged by your interest

I am extremely busy at this time. I will have more time to write soon. However, I am both a teacher and a student in "The School Of Ministry". It is something that takes a lot of dedication and our finals are coming up. In addition to these classes, I preach occasionally on the yard. I play guitar most week days at our outdoor gatherings. Also, I am active in counseling and therapy.

I will be grateful for any assistance you or anyone else would like to give me. There are ways to contribute.

It is possible for me to receive one package each quarter. They have to be purchased from an accepted vendor. If a person wants to send me a package I need advance notice. It will be necessary to correspond with them through the mail first.

Paper or books are both desirable. Paper is in short supply at this time. It will be a great help to receive some in the mail. Any books sent to me need to be mailed through the U.S. Postal Service. They must come from a book distributor. Paperback copies are best. We can receive hardcovers but they cut off the covers and often damage the binding. I do not like to see this abuse happen to them so please send softcover. Only new books are allowed.

Any funds sent to me will go entirely into my account. I am fortunate to have no liens on my trust account. I owe no restitution. All money I receive will benefit me and be greatly appreciated.

The easiest way to send money is through the internet. There are many services that make these transactions possible. One place that does it is located at www.inmatedeposit.com This way allows you to contribute without revealing to me your return address if that is preferable for you.

In the next week or two I will try to address your other comments. I may refrain from answering a question if it looks like doing so will bring harm to myself or others. Please bear with me, this forum is very public and I do want to be careful. I am aware that with great privilege comes great responsibility.

Sincerely,

Patrick
