

"Photo of knowledge"

Life is a journey of knowledge that we all must take, some of us travel this journey of life with difficulty some with ease and then there are those of us who take the middle course. Nevertheless and at the end of a mans journey, you could simply look him in his eyes and tell that he's been where he's been, seen what he's seen, knows what he knows, and has done what he's done. His eyes is his story, his journey lies within and just the same "Like sand through an hourglass so are the days of our lives". That at said, "I could survive off of what the average individual would die from"
