Random mandatory lie detector test For staff members in the Florida Dept. of Corrections (FDOC) is surely a great idea, in order to weed out the corruption, and bring a higher standard of honor and integrity to a Dept. that is lacking in morals. For this would not only keep the honest officer's honest, it would weed out the criminal element that brings in and sells drugs, pornography, cell phones, guns, knives, keys and other illegal contraband into level seven maximum security prisons. And this happens much more often than what you hear about. This is a good idea.

The only staff members that I can see protesting this measure, is those officers and staff members who violate rules of professional conduct 33-208.002 FAC (Florida Administrative Codes) and who are financially prospering off introducing and selling illegal contraband inside these maximum security prisons.

Some of the money makers in contraband are items such as Hustler magazines sell for $20 to $30, in here a pack of $2. smoking tobacco will go for $25. I've seen tobacco go as high as $35. a pack. money talks, and if you got money you can get anything you want. And staff are human, and acceptable to greed. Lie detector test would at least make staff think, before they react. There is real good money in this, and there's no real way to stop it, other than mandatory lie detector test or personalized audio and video devices.

Back in 2000 through 2004, I personally witnessed not just C.O.'s and SGT's. but Lt's. and Captains get involved in selling tobacco, porn and other contraband by using Close Management III inmates at Florida State Prison (FSP) to sell their contraband from wing to wing. Back then death row could have smoking tobacco, I had a Captain come to my cell wake me up at about 2am and picked up like 30 packs of tobacco couple cans of dip and coffee for an inmate that was paying him. you just wouldn't believe some of what goes on in here. I later heard rumors that that inmate and Captain were involved in a sexual relationship. I don't know if that was true or not. I know there's been inmates and officer's who have been involved in homosexual relationships, the inmate will scream rap and then sue the FDOC and get paid. mandantory lie detector test would prevent that type of behavior, and therefore save hundreds of thousands of dollars in law suits, and prevent alot of bad behavior, as well as protect the security of these maximum security prisons.

People need to take this to the Florida Legislature and or Governor's Office and push for this to be passed. For this is away to weed out some of the criminal activity that takes place, and restore some honor and integrity to the Florida Dept. of Correction.

Please help me push for this change by contacting the below addresses of the Florida Legislature and Governor. In Peace and Love
