

A Step Too Far!

2-26-12

It has occurred to me that inmates in Oregon will let their shit be taken by D.O.C. Except for one thing, T.V. channels. It's hilarious to me actually. There's a reason you'll never see Oregon prisons featured on these showcase shows. It's lame here.

When the tobacco was taken because of a couple clean air freaks nobody did anything. No riot, formal complaints or any such response that I know of. When the free weights were taken, again noone did shit. But 2011 rolls around and a fucked up T.V. package comes out, that's a step too far! Really?

As the news spreads of impending small screen doom, people gather to respond in kind. The solution to screwing up "Real Housewives" and "Jersey Shore"? No canteen. Stop going to canteen for a month and sales will drop so badly they'll have to listen.

Don't get me wrong, I applaud the retaliation attempt. It's just a little too late for my taste. Lifers have to die in good health to appease the non smokers. Not too healthy though because now they can't work out properly.

It's all good to me really, but it was just funny that unity would finally happen to prevent the loss of "Mad Men" and "Extreme Fishing".

As I've said we're not hardcore or violent enough, or interesting really, to be on MSNBC although a lot of Chris Hanson's guests are here probably here. Ha? Sorry, that was in poor taste surely.

Seriously though. As free people, would you be the slightest bit interested in watching a system more worried about losing T.V. than all the hustling and stabbing and the more explosive prison show fare? Didn't think so. I wouldn't. The freaking Iowa episode I saw has us beat. Ha?

I apologize to those reading this. "They" say that an artist or writer puts out what they take in life. I've taken a lot of crap and mediocrity the last 15 years. So, that's what you get. I'm not exactly Steven King or Judie Bloom. Which is probably a good thing? Ha! Ha!
