

Trayvon Martin

I don't know you personally but your story has been shown all over the world. What happened to you was not right and I pray ultimately justice will truly be served.

My heart goes out to your family and friends for not only your loss but the complications they are facing seeking justice for it. I will tell you this . . . many people love you and I'm sure you're in heaven smiling and feeling very proud of the love and support that has been shown to you.

Often times in our lives we can't process why things are happening to us or why we go through different hardships and adversities. I've learned that the true testament to our character is how we respond to the hard times in our life. Do we panic, act out, hurt ourselves or others, or do we get stronger, humble, patient, loving and get closer to one another.

What has happened to you was terrible, however the impact of your situation has brought our country together in a much needed way. One can only be proud of the love, unity, support, and commitment in seeking justice for your precious life.

Trayvon . . . may your spirit rest in peace and please know ~~we~~ we are all pursuing your justice.
