SUBJECT: #23 - My Final Blog

DATE: 04/16/2012 04:28:03 PM

This will be the last blog that I post with BTB. I wanted to say how thankful I am for the great service they have provided for me as an inmate. They have gone far beyond anything I and the vast majority of prisoners have come to expect from inmate assisting organizations. Their service even goes beyond most companies that offer services to inmates for a fee. I hope that BTB is able to do this for a long time, because I truly believe this organization is helping with our rehabilitation.

Thank you to everyone that posted comments and offered opinions. You all have also been able to assist me in becoming a stronger and better person. You will not be forgotten.

On May 8th, I will be arriving at my designated halfway house, where I will begin my transition back into the world. I will be leaving a lot of people behind, most of which deserve what they got, but a few of which I consider to be very good human beings that just made a terrible mistake in their lives. It's surprisingly bittersweet to be walking out that door knowing some of the people that helped shape you will be dying in this place. I wish I could help that, but I can't.

On April 26th, I will be sending BTB an official account termination notice for my blog. By April 30th, I expect it should be carried out. Once on the street, I plan to continue with a new blog in some format. I'm not sure where it will be, but I'm sure anyone who wants to can look me up. Life's funny that way.

NOTE: I have an email account set up, smalltownbassist@gmail.com, which is currently active. I will be accessing it as soon as I am able to. As stated elsewhere, this email goes mostly for family and friends, but I will not ignore any tasteful email sent to me.

Thanks again to everyone.
