

4-15-12

Here I blog again (on feelings of a sort)

I suppose I should acknowledge my 2 sons who happen to be ~~two~~ of the few things worth living for. Their mother is a selfish person (which runs in her family) and I doubt any of the letters I ever wrote got to either one of the guys.

Thanks to numbers of friends who either have their own kids in school with my sons; or those who keep tabs for me via other avenues, I at least am able to get some updates as to what they're up to.

I wish I could be ~~there~~ there to cheer them on personally but Divide, Destroy, Ruin seems to be the way of the beast in control and I am powerless against the disciples of evil. (Read: State of California, CDCR, Dept. of Social Svcs. et al.)

Surprisingly, they both appear to do well, and recently my oldest got a community award for an art design - so congratulations...into the ether I blogged.

There may be confusion from an earlier post vs. this one - why, if I love them so much, would I ever want to move 4000 miles away once I get out? Again - I am powerless against evil greater than myself and her connections know no limits. I'd rather keep my life and freedom than lose it again, and someday I'm sure the offspring will come to understand that.

~IN A FUTURE BLOG COMING SOON~

Sadly too, the STATE seems to still love tearing families apart