

Reply: twice

18 April '12

Hey Kim, "from many years ago" 😊 (when you say it like that it makes us look "old").

Awesome! It is so cool to hear from you, old love of mine I still think of you all the time with a smile in my heart. I'm so glad that Sue let you know about my blog-site, and that you are able to access it.

Have you been able to navigate your way through all my past blogs? I've shared plenty of thoughts and old photographs in the fifteen-plus months I've had this opportunity. I'm pretty much straight-forward and candid with it, as it seems the ~~best~~ only means of leaving clues of who I am - and have been, for anyone who might ever want to know.

"Why we were never able to truly get it going", for instance: Kim, I was entirely responsible for that! I was in awe of your beauty and intelligence, young as it was. I actually kinda felt like you might have seen me as a bronc which could be tamed and trained — and that my dear is why I always broke away from the harness. Stupid me! Being raised in the juvenile justice system, I just couldn't stand the thought of locking myself into a relationship or a career or anything. Sure I regret that now! Look what I'm locked into for the rest of my life now.

Such is life, eh? Sad but true! But hey, what's up with you? Your kids are grown ~ how did you do as a Mom, I wonder? What kinda people did you raise? Okay, since I missed this lesson of life in the most part about "parenting", I want to ask you what is the most valuable thing it taught you? What did parenting teach you about yourself? What are your plans in life now that your kids are grown? Business?

It's rare that Sue writes to let me know what is happening in ~~your~~ her life, so I'd really appreciate if you'd include that info when you write me Kim. I wish you all the best.

Be Blessed.