"GRIND'N" in the streets often times refers to hustlen. I remember slang'n dope and I'd get a call asking what I was doin and my response would be " I'm out here grind'n". The whole concept behind grind'n is from the time you wake up to the time you go to sleep your on a paper chase (trying to make money).

My view on robbing, selling drugs, or engaging in my criminal activities have changed... I simply don't want any parts of it. However, my desire to grind have not left me only I'll be grind'n on the job, grind'n in college, grind'n with my music, and grind'n with trying to get my own business up in running.

The grind is slower in the legit world but its safer and more stable. I believe I'm smart enough to do more than what the streets offers and I intend on doing so. As of right now I have a book on small business I'm reading, a mind full of ideas, and ambition to reach success. I'll probably always be a hustler but the hustle has just changed.

I'm not too proud to grind from the bottom up. I'll start off at McDonalds and work my way up to millions. I have a vision, a dream, and I'm daily outlining the plans I need to make them come true. Prison can make you or break you... I nearly lost my mind in here but I pulled through so I feel prison has not broken me.

I'm learning, I'm growing, I'm maturing... I'm "GRIND'N".

Questions?

Are you out grind'n?
