

Saturday

I got up this morning and went to the Chow hall to eat breakfast. We had Pancakes. Not the typical type of Pancakes you're probably thinking of. Lol. Basically just dry bread without syrup. After that I went to work. I'm a Janitor over at the education building. It's through the department of Labor, and I get a time-cut once I complete the program. That should be within a couple months. They have a bunch of different programs you can get time-cuts for. So I'm on a sort of time-line. I have certain programs I'll be doing, and my goal is to be at work release by late 2014. I spend a lot of time writing my family, reading, and working out to stay in shape. I definitely don't go looking for trouble, but if trouble finds me I need to be in shape, so I can defend myself. That's just the reality of this place.
