

Self Exploration through Writing ~ extra curricular assignment:

"Who am I?"

Okay, am I really just a Prisoner now, doing two life terms?
Am I really just a Special Needs freak at this P.C. freak facility?
Am I really the celibate thespian Amanduh, that titillating alter-ego who much the same as the Corporal Klinger character on the old M.A.S.H. show, entertains the troops? Am I really the crazy viking queen who terrifies the kids who come through here on their scared strait tour? Am I really the bearded biker used to pushing my weight around? Am I the intellectual mind-vamp who plays with bestial souls? Am I the sucker who pampers selfish guests passing through, or the goading proctor who is used to breach-birthing retards prematurely? Am I really just a Wolf in Sheeps clothing?

What happened to being a father, a husband, a lover, a brother — or a brothers Keeper? I used to be an American seditionist, a quixotic crusader, an iconoclast adventurer, and an errant knight on wayward journies of discovery. Am I the hurt little boy whose whole life is just a compensation for some traumatizing experiences of childhood? Am I ever who I appear to be?

Who am I, is the writing assignment which I've answered aeons-ago when this quest of life began. I am not inherently any of these glamorous props of living listed above ... and yet, I have experienced Being all of them for a brief time.

I suppose that I can proffer a simple answer to the three-word query "Who am I", with three-words that sum it all up in "I am Eternal". You see, we are intrinsically Spiritual Beings, all having this human experience in all its facets. Behind all the props of Being, We are Eternal.
