

COMMUNICATION

Good communication is a necessity if you're human. We cannot successfully run a business or relationship by being silent and assuming that people are psychic and can read our minds. Yes, I understand silence is necessary sometimes but being a good leader means that you can execute orders and direction in a way that will make people listen and follow your lead. Running a successful business means that your employees clearly know what your mission is and what your plans are. They do not need to know every last detail but they need to trust that you know what you are doing. This is done by communication. When an employee gets hired by a company, 9 times out of 10 they will see the "mission statement" on either the company's website or their employee manual book. An effective manager will give the employee a rundown on the profits they expect to see that year and instruct the employee on how they want them to assist in helping the company make that goal. They want the employee to be fully informed and knowledgeable on what is expected of them. This cancels out any confusion and improves employee performance. This is the same thing with relationships. I'm old fashioned with this and believe the man should lead in steering a romantic relationship. To have a successful relationship, the man has to communicate his goals and plan. This allows her to trust him and the relationship. I do understand men and women are different with communication. Most women love to talk about everything and most men can skip all the chit chat and fine details. However, if a man wants a woman to trust him, he needs to communicate his goals and plans. He doesn't have to tell her every last detail but he needs to tell her something so there is no confusion. It's just as important (if not more important) to communicate with your romantic partner as it is to communicate with your employees or fellow co-workers.
