

[In our mirror]

You view the world by your suspicious behavior and reasoning to always want to know and learn more about what you view and hear in the world, you choose to be careful not to let yourself suspicion show so, you change your behavior by acting out in your own and best showmanship with your stone face to the world, your hardest walk and your most notorious voice with less educational vocabulary than you were raised with and taught to use...

There's always an misunderstanding with what you view in the world but, more so with one another cause, you tend to look at everyone and everything as a threat or as something less stronger than you are.

Fear within fear, the face in the mirror that's looking back at you, challenging yourself, a show down with the empty face in the glass against your own reflection which stands before the empty image of yourself that will only copy your movements no then more. It's fascinating how we as people take an image and mirror it and allow ourselves to manipulate ourselves and each other cause, your deepest fear is yourself and if someone could manage just a small reflection of you they've found that behavior point in which sets off the fear and threat in you which passes to be something no stronger than the image in the mirror, in turn, happens to be your own reflection...
