

Daniel Gwynn Blog Update

Date: 9/17/12

a lot has been going on around here, and I really don't know where to begin. The prison has been a buzz with people flying in & out all day everyday for the past few weeks. the pending execution of Terrance Williams has everyone on edge. No one seems to know what they're doing, or how to handle (administratively or emotionally) being so close to an involuntary execution. It's really happening people! No decision has been made yet. He's having that hearing today, so there's still a chance he could be spared. but it's an election year, and the republicans want their "brownie points" for being tough on crime. I can't believe that some people are actually excited about executing another human being. it's just not right!

As he was being escorted to some preliminary interviews there was an unusual procession of guards escorting him with a video camera in tow recording any sudden movements. it was so official, like they were carrying him off to the death table.

I've always thought that capital punishment was only supposed to be reserved for the "worst-of-the-worst," but as I check its list of victims ensnared, i can only see a handful of what could be considered that. Do they even know what it means anymore or what the DP represents?? when did they lose their objectivity & rationale, trading it for petty vindictiveness & political grandstanding??

Well, he has a hearing today that'll determine whether he lives or dies. I don't know how long it will take for them to come to a decision, but I pray it's to save his life!!!!!!!!!!!!
