A Correction/and T. Williams' Stay of Execution

Dear Friends,

I wish to apologize for my error in reporting that: Andrea Foulker, the prosecutor at the trial of Terrance Williams, was a federal judge. Correction, she is a federal prosecutor now.

Again I apologize for my error, and pray that you will allow me to continue to inform you. Thank you.

Terrance "Butter" Williams was thankfully granted a stay of execution today. This means that he still has a fighting chance to receive a fair sentence. Hopefully, he'll be awarded a new sentencing hearing & sentence. With the new evidence uncovered by his attorneys, and a bit more digging into the decess's twisted sexual history of abusing young boys, including Butter, he'll have a good chance to receive an appropriate sentence. Especially if the other victims continue to come forward.

Of course, the headache will be the DA's office appealing this every step of the way, wasting taxpayers' money. Are they seeking justice anymore, or is it the win?
