

The Gods of Patriotism and Obedience

I have to confess. I'm not sorry to the American public for anything. Not for how I've lived my life, not for the numerous crimes that i've committed. I'm sorry for having offended God, who is an infinite good, but feeling remorse to a system or society that is quite possibly the most morally bankrupt and intrinsically evil the world has ever produced is a little beyond my acting skills.

When I see a judge, prosecutor, or policeman enforcing a law that they themselves can't, and even choose, not to abide by, and in fact, make entire careers and practices out of knowingly and intentionanlly violating, does the whole charade not seem ludicrous to anyone else? I know that some of the public may be able to claim ignorance. Maybe a great majority are, in fact, to absorbed in American Idol and Starbuck Latte sipping to actually pay attention to what goes on in the real world, but even they must be in the minority. Anyone who even casually reads the paper will have noticed how many people have been railroaded into the world's largest 2.4 million man prison system, will have read about the lies, the sorruption, about officers planting evidence on people, on running crime organizations themselves and other such crimes perpetuated by our 'representative' government.

I'm not even getting onto all the crimes that Washington perpetuates all across the world in other lands. The rapes, the killings of innocent women and children, the bribes, the funneling of arms and ammunition into groups that we know will use them to wage guerilla wars to topple 'unfavorable' regimes... 'unfavorable' not meaning evil or because they violate fundamental human rights, but unfavorable merely because they don't support favorable trade agreements or other nonessential nonsense to make money for America.

I guess the righteous thing to do, according to the pwers that be, of course, is to sit down and shut up. and anyone who deesn't of course, is susceptible to any violation of constitutional rights, susceptible to having evidence planted on them, framed, perjured and convicted.

And equally predictable, of course, is that no matter what our government does or how evil it is, the public will clamor it's approval. and anyone who opposes Washington's agenda and is labeled an enemy of teh state, the public will condemn and hate and expect us to feel sorry for our actions...well, I don't particualrly feel sorry. In fact, I think it's America that will feel sorry when the time comes.

I talk to alot of so-called good people...you know, crooked cops, prostitute prison guards, etc...and so many of them at some point will admit that the people they serve are absolutely corrupt and cannot be trusted but then they conclude with..."but I'm just doing my job" I've had a number of them use this on me to somehow justify their moral superiority over mine.

It always reminds me of the Nazi S.S. guards defense at the Nueremberg trials. "Just doing our jobs...just following orders" they said. at the end of which they were either lined up against a wall and shot or hung.

Since when does doing your job, when it amounts to screwing people over or obeying men you believe or have reason to believe are evil or are screwing people over become a righteous thing?

On the flip side, if "just doing your job" entails depriving me of basic fundamenatl human rights, would, or could, , or will, you consider me wrong or evil if, in reprisal, i take one of your lives? or would you still assume the moral high ground and claim I'm 'crazy' or a 'criminal' for responding to you the way you have acted against me...unprovoked?

I think its great that America is declining economically. I know that the U.S. military is far too strong right now for a foreign power to begin shipping arms and ammunition to domestic dissident groups opposed to Washington right now. or to any group thats concept of 'right and wrong' isn't blind obedience to washington decrees, but I got a feeling once we lose our ability to bully the rest of the world into submission, the rest of the world may give us the ability to not be bullied into submission by our domestic tyrants either.

Maybe then we can contest the moral superiority of the prostitutes and drug dealers, and child molesters that rule the country now.

Maybe we'll have large trial like the Nazis had. maybe we'll listen as the respectable people tell us it was just their job to screw us over, just their jobs to plant evidence, just tehir jobs to enforce orders they knew to be wrong. maybe after its all said and done, we'll get to see our judges and police officers and prison guards all lined up against a wall and shot as well.

Funny way how history has ^{a way} of repeating itself, funny thing how people never seem to learn either...In case you haven't noticed yet...Captalism is out the door. This election may slow its departure but seriously if you can't see the writing on the wall You just don't want to see the writing on the wall. Looks like Mammon wasnt such a great God to worship after all, w either.....
