

Love Is Subjective

11-29-12

We are born with inalienable emotional needs for love, safety, acceptance, freedom, attention, validation of our feelings, and physical holding. These needs are felt and remembered cellularly throughout our lives, though we may not always be intellectually aware of them. We may feel that our very survival is based on finding someone to fulfill our basic needs. These type of people have the mind set of the following ~~phr~~ phrase: "I can't live without your love". Keep in mind that the origin of our identity is love. The Earth and its inhabitants were created by God out of love. You and I were conceived by our parents out of love. Therefore we each need to feel loved. There is no one objective way love can be shown that will fit for everyone. Love is subjective: each person reads it best in the language in which they learned it. So once a person, as myself, has lost that love that ~~fe~~ fills every void in your being, you will pursue that glowing star in the sky that represents..... US!
