Since I've been in prison my life has change intricately for the better from its extremities. I have spent time in solitary confinement which a slowly growing and ~~evolving~~ maturing society is condemning. When I was in the world I never felt as ostracized as I do now simply because my address has changed. Prisoners are at times treated less than humane. Nonetheless, through all the hostility and adversity I educated myself, and have made a legit effort on teaching other people to not harm innocence individuals rather mentally or physically. And as I speak our rights and the small things we take for granted on the street including necessities are being repudiated. We are all one movement and if we realize this corruption will stop overnight.
