

The Ancient Art Form... Mailing letters! Pg 1 of 1

Recently I received a response to a post and the ~~the~~ person said "I would write directly but it seems so ancient." That's totally understandable but I'd hate for the art of "Mailing letters" to be lost. It's such a personal and real way of communicating that just can't be lost in this world we live.

It's something about the paper, the hand writing, the anticipation of opening the envelope, that make mailing letters so real and personal... How can we give up on that?

Read my past posts titled "Mail Call" or "Lost in a Technological Age"... This issue is serious to me! Since I been blogging a lot of people have written me directly and I'm so grateful for that.

So look... I don't care if you write me, a family member, friend, or prisoner... take the time to send someone a letter and let me know how you feel afterwards. O.K... Take care out there.
