

My Journey to the / Free world

I am about a year away from getting out to the free world. I swear my time has seemed so slow these past few months. I have so much on my mind but nothing consumes my thoughts more than preparing myself for the tasks and responsibilities of the outside.

I have come to terms a long time ago that "I" am responsible for my actions that led me here so only "I" can make the choices to keep me out.

It all starts now, I'm working out to keep my heart, lungs, and body in good condition. I'm reading all that <http://betweenthebars.org/blogs/2042/> my eyes and mind can consume to keep my thoughts in focus. I'm making smart choices in here like I'll have to make out there such as who I hang around or what past times I'll engage in.

Those who have read any of my past blogs know how serious I am about living a productive life out there. I'm embracing any and all advice from all of you in hopes you have some words or direction to push me forward on this journey...I cannot fail this time.

Thanks for hearing me out and I look forward to sharing my experiences with you until I'm released and once I'm out. In the mean time reach out to me and share all that your heart desires and all that you can to express that hard work pays off to those who believe and work hard.