

- Reply ID: bf62.

Jesse Wilson.

Voice12

3-3-13

Your guess is correct I will be paying the consequences the rest of my life. I'll die in prison. As for the word murderer. Look it is important to me, why? because I am not one. Yes I killed a man in prison, but I did not murder him. He was not some innocent being minding his own business. He was sentenced to die for his crimes. Obviously I am not the state executioner, nor am I claiming any of that played a role - I'm just saying I did not murder him. We faced off man & man I killed him. One of us was going to die that night. Bottom line. Prison is ugly, violent and sick. I did not create this place or these rules, I do not even think it makes sense. It is what it is though. And I do acknowledge how sick this all is. I'm not above being affected by the infection. As for my life still being important, thank you for saying so, and of course I like to believe this as a fact. I'll tell you though. These concrete cages make one hard pressed at times to believe such a thing. Only the love of family and friends press harder, so yes I am blessed to know this truth. The world I exist in however holds no respect for life. So knowing this fact (that my life is important) means I am willing to kill to keep it. Does this make me a murderer?