Do I smell a poetess?

Excellent association! Yes, our fates are ours to make, rather than the effects of a sneaky, spiritual God. Only once we realize this, particularly those in power (e.g. W. Bush, Bill Clinton + Obama, down to local judges, lawyers, bureaucrats), can we create a kinder, gentler, more...happy (?) reality. One of the core ironies of those who believe in a spiritual God, particularly Christians, Muslims + Jews, is that in relying solely on God to fix things, things get worse, which they take as a sign that God is testing or punishing them, thus they believe in their God more fervently, taking even less responsibility for their + our fates, resulting in things getting worse, which they take as proof of the end of the world + imminent return of the Messiah, God's will, so things get even worse... it's a vicious cycle that's went on for thousands of years.

Never read that book you mentioned, The Dark Is Rising, + I really don't have the time too, + certainly can't purchase it to read it. Will you please tell us more about it though? Fiction, non-fiction, author, + a summary?

I'm always thrilled at readers "getting" me, as you did + look forward to more of your comments.

See my earlier posts! They're not dated/old + also well-written.

Sincerely
Nate
