Hey, I got your message a few days ago. Thank you for taking the time to finish the transcription for my post. I know that this takes both time and work. So you have my thanks. Trust me when I say I appreciate everything you do. I was also glad to read that you can really understand what I write about. As far as your question as to whether i read any good books at the moment that might give me some type of excitement yes I do read about 3 new ones every week or so depending on how long the library here allows me to check them out. Lately I have been reading books that are of the 'fantasy' genre. I love this and science fiction the best. I have had the current 3 books for 2 weeks. Which now is going into my 2nd week with them. I finished 2 of them pretty fast but this last one I am taking my time with. The first 2 books are called--"The Wedding" by Nicholas Sparks. And "Bad Moon Rising" by Sherrilyn Kenyon. The book I am still working on is "The Lord of the Rings Part 1: The Fellowship of the Ring" by J.R.R. Tolkien. I try to read books that will hold my attention even after I have finished reading them. I have read all but one of the Nicholas Sparks books the library here has to offer but i hope to get it the next time I request some books. I am also going to get another book by the Author Sherrilyn Kenyon because it's a series of about 10 books and I have only read like 2 of them. Then of course I have to read the other 2 books in "The Lord of the Rings" series. Yeah I have seen the movies but I always like to compare the movies and the books and see whichg ones are better. I was reading a series by Christopher Paolini Called "The Inheritance Series". There are a total of four books to this series the library here only had 3 of them but I hope to buy the fourth one once I go home. They made a movie out of the first one. It was called Eragon. It was good as far as movies go that are adapted from books but I think they should have stuck more closely to a book that it was from as possible. I wish I knew how to better write screen plays but to me they are kind of confusing so I just stick to writing what I do know. I hope you enjoy reading the things I write and I hope to hear back from you soon. Thanks for your comment.
