

I find it very funny that a nation so isolated and ostracized like North Korea is having such an effect on politicians in both North America and S. Korea.

I'm not versed in North Korea so much nor do I claim to be but what I want to state is that it's hysterical how North Korea is basically telling North America "fuck-you"! Anybody versed in politics or "His-Story" will know that "America" is a bully. Hegemony and imperialism run through this nation's veins, from the "Monroe Doctrine" to the "Manifest Destiny" and up to the "war on terror". It's a simple fact and all who have a brain can understand. I'm pretty sure sooner or later they'll be a "war on guns" if no legislation gets passed concerning gun control.

Anyway, with a nuclear weapon it seems it deters U.S. involvement. There's been much talk about new North Korean leader but not much of the leaders in this "country". Of course war will be devastating in cost of human lives but I welcome the "fresh" push from North Korea. Many nations are out-right afraid of the U.S. and thereby compliant in its wars.

Hopefully more nations will take a ~~prong~~ play out of the play-book and tell "America" to fuck-off. Like a parasite sucking the life out of their resources. As for where the bombast and rhetoric of war goes... it's yet to be seen.
