

History (revised and edited for secular correctness)

Someone recently asked me why I read so much history, as it seems to be a waste of time and has absolutely no practicable application. I didn't really have an answer offhand, but after a bit of reflection, here's why I am so interested in it: Cause it's nothing like popular perceptions or what's taught in schools or universities nowadays.

Anyone familiar with George Orwell's book "1984", will probably recall that in an effort to influence the populace's collective memory of the past and to control their hatreds and rivalries, the future governments would go back and burn all the history books and new ones would be written by historians completely contradicting what was written and taught a measly few weeks before. If before country A was at war with country B and children were taught that country A and B had been mortal enemies for thousands of years and that country B (or A) had inflicted countless atrocities on its counterpart, well when political conditions shifted and countries A and B's interests were now aligned, against say country C...well, to the flames with all the former history books and new ones would be written claiming that C country had been eternally at war with the combined forces of good: countries A and B. On and on, which the main character at one point remarked that he would have to be the only person in a sea of idiots to remember back a week prior when the opposite was taught.

"Whoever controls the present controls the past, whoever controls the past controls the future" so the ideology went. It's a completely fictional book and I'm sure that everyone thinks that it could/would never actually happen...but if anyone actually reads history nowadays, they will discover that that is exactly what has and is happening. It's pretty eerie and unbelievable unless one actually sits back and does some research for themselves.

I recently picked someone's brain awhile back and, no surprise, discovered their obvious indoctrination into the prevalent pseudo-history of today that seems to be so prevalent. They actually told me such things as Christianity plunged Europe into the Dark Ages (and defined it, no less!), that the Inquisition targeted old ladies for being a little odd, that the Muslims were completely innocent during the whole period of the Crusades and were never an aggressor to Christian Europe for that matter...on and on, I'm sure you've heard and/or believe the current party line...

Take a country like Britain for instance (England, Scotland, or Wales, N. Ireland, it makes no difference), and cite me one source that describes the glorious pre-Christian civilization that flourished which Christianity plunged them into the dark ages from. Just one source should do. The only thing that could even remotely be considered a pre-Christian civilization in those parts would be the slavery imposed upon them by the occupying Romans, well, the England part anyways. Scotland was just written off as hopelessly savage with the building of Hadrian's wall in 122 AD.

I mean, you can't make this stuff up. Julius ceasar left behind a biography, in which he recounts in detail his wars with Gaul and Britain, and it was nothing but shifting masses of warring tribes...no roads, no government (except thousands of independent tribes that were just as likely to fight with each other as for each other) , no standard of currency, no taxes, no laws, except as each tribal chief dictated, which changed with the weather and were completely arbitrary...no written language (even their Druid priests had some rule against writing the rituals of their language down) no books, no schools, no nothing... It's hard to understand what, exactly, the modern student believes Europe was plunged FROM with the advent of Christianity...nevrtheless, thats what they're told to believe and do, in fact, believe.

After the collapse of the Roman Empire around 476 AD (and it was receding way before then) Western Europe was plunged right back into the darkness from which it came, with absolutely no help or influence from Christianity. (Clovis was the first Gaulish cheiftein to convert about 496 AD) . It was largely pagan during its return to the darkness .

People say "imagine wher Europe would be without the stunting influence of the Church" Yeah I can imagine...either in an uncivilized barbaric wasteland, or, more pobably, in slavery to the muslims.

People forget; The arabs were also nomadic tribesman before Islam. The Quran was the first book written in Arabic, which unified them and they promptly pushed across the Middle east, north Africa and enslaved Spain (against its will, contrary to modern historians) around 711 AD. It was only a Christian tribe under Charles martel in Western France that stopped the Arabic armies from spilling into and conquering France. Anyone familiar with Ceasars Gaulic wars can see how easy the disunified tribes of Gaul were before Christianity and how the whole nation fell to his force, even though they outnumbered him by way more than a hundred to one odds...not to mention had the advantage of defending their own soil... The liberals would have you forget all that. It really is amazing!

Its really hilarious when I read a liberal speak about the tolerance of Islam during these times. But REAL world history will show that whole peoples of Spain were reduced to slaves and the Catholics had numerous ordrs such as the TRinitarians AKA the Order of the Most Holy Trinity, among so many others whsoe sole mission was to liberate or ransom Christian slaves from the Moslems. Whats more ridiculous is when the false prophet liberals also happen to be feminists. I wonder if they have ever actually read the Koran? Have they not noticed all the parts where a man can not only have lawful sex with numerous wives " but also any slaves whom his right hand possesses" throug, war or otherwise? Hmmm...probably won't read that out of any modern anti-Christian college. Nor about the Christian children forced into slavery into the Janissary corps. I had someone recently tell me that the Jannissaries were not Christian slaves and were given up willingly...Come on, I have to ask, where do they get this stuff? Are they ~~te~~aching history outta a Bolshevick fanantasy book now or what?

I dont know. I could go on ideofinately...about how even the classics are being re-written...like the first saga written in a British language...BEOWULF. Has anyone ever read the original? with all the Christian undertones? ie..the monster Grndel was descended from Cain after he was expelled from the land when he killed Able...or all the referbeces to God and Christ?

Modern versions gloss over all that. Some say that some mysterious person planted the Christian parts!!! Ha!! so they rewrite it!!! Why didnt britain have a book written in its prechristian past? if it was so glorious, I mean?

But gthats not the half of it. Its really sickening how they have completely obliterated any memory of actual factual history from not only the minds of students and the general public but even of the so called eduactional curriculum of today.

So what now? just pretend to beleive any thing the hirelings say and play the gullible sheep and play along??? They can call me crazy for placing my Faith in God all day long, and I'll call them crazy right back for putting their faith in easily provable liars, corrupt governmnet officials, crooked cops and lawmakers....you can have all of that. They can remain at the feeding and watering trough..me? I'd rather be dead than serve that/them. A world run by tha type of people is a world not worth living in in my opinion.

We'll go...but we won't go quietly....but ~~thats~~ alright, we're at peace with crossing over into the hereafter. For someone with everything to lose since they believe in no herefater...well, I guess the price theyrt asked to pay to die for their beliefs (or lack thereof) becomes all that more unacceptable doesnt it???Ha!! Good thing they have the sheep to pay the price for them! Not me!!!
