

"What love is and should be"

Love isn't how unconditionally you love another, nor how you earnestly seek to make their everyday sublime and joyous as you do. It's the ability to love unconditionally and joyously the wonderful you.

Love isn't how deeply you dare to believe in me as you surely do; it's how deeply that you dare to believe in the beautiful you.

It's not how earnest you are in your quest to understand me, as you honestly seek to do; it's the willingness and earnesty with which you seek to understand you.

It's not the sincerity and eagerness with which you are willing to forgive me for whatever I might do;

It's how you're willing to honestly forgive you, no matter what you may do.

This is what Love is and should ever be - in that you are able to truly love others unconditionally, including little ole me.
