RE: WAS SLAVERY EVER ABOLISHED

Dear Concern Reader:

Was slavery ever really abolished in the United States of America? or was the slaves stolen from the Continent of Africa, and the descendants of the past long dead slaves extended liberties which we stupidly equate with the words freedom.

How come you always hear the words, "our legal system is broken" however, its the best justice system in the entire world?. Maybe, if Citizens of the United States were to realize that, the reason the system is broken, is because we have a corrupt political system designed around the orchestration of introducing laws for political gain.

Who are the one's to hold the government accountable, or the criminals who have deceived the feeble minded lower educated Citizens into voting them into office, to further there own aspiration for wealth and power.

How can African Americans continue to lay trust in a corrupt leal justice system, when theirs absolutely [no]' justice, but, just us getting "F" over with absolutely no remorse or sympathy or mercy extended towards us in a humanly compassionate manner from others placed in a position to extend aid and comfortability, however, refuse to do so.

Maybe, if African Americans placed into a political position to extend aid, and make change, and wasn't scared of making there damed masters mad, then we probably would achieve some real success in these area's.

America is a Country operating on an aparthied invisible political dynamically ran agenda, with modern day house nigga's voted into Legislative and Congressional offices that should be held duly accountable for the full weight of visibly clear oppression African Americans fall subject to throughout this Country's legal system.

How can you get angry at white's for looking after their own, its equating a hypothetical scenario of one neighbor getting angry at another neighbor because one keeps his yard clean and the other cares less about the landscape of his yard. These are word from A California State slave in loving memory of Trevon Martin.

SINCERLY
