"Crime belongs to the concept 'revolt against social order'. One does not 'punish' a rebel. One suppresses him. A rebel can be a miserable and contemptible man, but there is nothing contemptible in a revolt as such and to be a rebel in a review of contemporary society does not in itself lower the value of a man. There are even cases in which one might have to honor a rebel, because [s]he finds something in our society against - which war ought to be waged - [s]he awakens us from slumber."

-Friedrich Nietzsche

Not only am I at the mercy of looking at news from the medias perspective but must also view what they show. What I do and have been seeing is marches and protest by people outraged over the not guilty verdict of George Zimmerman in the slaying of 17 year old Trayvon Martin.

I see reverends calling for peace, calm and putting faith in the 'justice system'. Along with this 'faith' in the justice system is the petition to the U.S Justice department to file civil rights violation charges against George Zimmerman. I can only shake my head in disappointment. In a trial that touched the hot-seat of 'racism', many 'blacks' were outraged of the not guilty verdict. This country has a dark history of genocidal tendencies and national oppression. From the wiping out of Natives to enslaving Africans and stealing of land. Most citizens deem this country as the best. And just as man is close to building a time machine, that statement, is farther from the truth.

There is nothing wrong with people venting

← While I'm on the subject of 'racism' let me say that for people who categorize people as 'race' need to get the facts straight. Scientifically there's no such thing as 'race'. Rare is a social constructed word to demean 'minority's'. There are ethnicities and more so National(s) but NO 'race'. Rarely masters national oppression.

their anger and frustration in the streets but how many are attacking the very system that makes laws and the system that carries them out? People are boycotting Florida in order to pressure that state to repeal it's 'Stand your ground law' but how many are boycotting the government? It's like getting mad at a homeless man for not living in a home but not STATE PROTECTION CO-OPERATION TA NUZ trying to critique the housing market or corporations who lay people off and offer no jobs? What kind of shit is that?

A cycle continues and will continue unless the whole system is dismantled. This Nation professes to be for the many but it's deeds and things prove it's only meant for certain people!
