

Letter to Keisha Re: the Sean Riker Debate

Hello Keisha.

Sorry, but I'll not be passing on your or any other messages to Sean, neither good nor bad messages. If the story wasn't so newsworthy, dramatic — a man who framed another convict for a murder he actually committed gets out, then gets framed for sexually abusing his stepchildren — I'd simply have removed all of the posts (thus all readers' comments) about him.

"Why?" Because when I asked him if he testified against the guy he tossed his bloody shank to, very politely, he wrote me a nasty letter, threatened me, then shit on me to my attorney for my pending cases. This did not surprise me, and I got a good laugh about him saying he "took [me] under [his] wing," but I do not tolerate abusive relationships, and I accept a person for what they show themselves to be.

I was torn from the moment I had reason to suspect Sean was a pathological liar and the worst type of snitch I'd ever heard of. See, I still see strong reason to doubt he's guilty of abusing his children, & probably (but less strongly, as they are part Phillipino ^{according to Sean} & Sean's virulently racist) his step-daughters too. And I don't want to be as treacherous as so many prisoners around me, including Sean, are. Besides, I can't see how the N.L.R., nor the A.B. (of whom the N.L.R. was once the send-offs for), could let Sean live. Even in WI there are a couple A.B.s, etc., who'd at least try to get Sean. He's got enough problems without me!

What's troubling is that there's no doubt that Taylor, his ex, is also highly disturbed — she did torture the son she had with Sean with razors, try to frame Sean for having child porn, etc. Yet there's the horrible possibility that she was fighting fire with fire! Maybe she learned from the best, who learned from the B.O.P.

Anyway, Sean's earned a place in my contemplated book about the bizarrest prisoners I've known, but I don't want to waste this precious blog with exciting yet sad details about the most tragic cases of humanity.

Take care of yourself. Nate

* I recently sent a note to Mr. Jordan, in viting him to partake in an interview about being framed by Sean.
