

I'm going to stop calling this place a prison and start calling it a offshoot concentration camp because as the years past more and more will die here in these steel and stone structures. The mass incarceration over the last 30 years is not sustainable and eventually a drastic change will have to happen. The question is how will the public will respond and it will be interesting to see since the public has been trained to loathe people who have committed crimes. Every time I hear about the public stigmatizing former inmate I can't help but think about that famous quote "behind every fortune is a crime". This might be the conspiracy theorist in me but I really believe that. I means how the fuck does a person make a billion without breaking some law, I don't believe that for one second. Look at what happened to Martha Stewart, that is self explanatory. I've met some of the smartest people in here but for whatever reason they are here. I'm talking about people who could easily be professors at Ivy league schools. Things like these makes me sick to my stomach because anybody with intelligence can see their potential and the fact that it is wasted should be a crime. I've met some guys who are without a doubt mathematical geniuses. Will someone please tell me how is this helping society?? We as a country have to start looking at things from more than one angle. If you attempt to construct a building with two wall what will happen:collapse. Keep in mind that some of the people who are our so called leader and pillars of society are direct descendants of racist who said black people wasn't a full man not too long ago. We really need to question things more and stop with this rabid obsession with money and fame. Its imperative that America wake up or the future will be a bleak with for many. Let me be first to say I don't have all the answers but one way to get answers is through the questions we ask. Life is made up of the questions we ask. I'm not convinced our so called leaders are doing all they can to change the position of those really struggling in this country. It seems like they give them a few peanuts every and then to keep the noise at bay. That may sound harsh but I gotta call things as I see it. I can't turn on the news without hearing about somebody else getting a life sentence. I ask myself when will we get to the root of the problem? I think last year I saw a piece on ABC about the high murder rate in Chicago but you could tell ABC was miles away looking through binoculars and they'll never be able to get to the root. It was a valiant effort but not thought out fully. Since we refuse to get to the root of America's problems we settle for short term solutions because eventually the long term solution will have to be addressed. It is so easy for people to be led in the wrong direction and so hard to be led in the right direction. In here I do watch alot of tv and I really would love it if they would ask the right questions. The media is so concerned with popular culture its disturbing but I have to assume that is what the people want. All I can say is that, it is sad for this generation who will have to overcome almost insurmountable odds. No one wants to talk about this in main stream media and I have to believe it is for a reason. Well take and always push forward. Proper Education Always Corrects Errors
