

Vacation

10-14-13

Like anything that goes through a lot of usage, it wears and tears after a while. And sooner or later with much usage it just stops working, thereby breaking.

Well, I have no intention of breaking my brain or having my mind weather away due to too much straining. I haven't wrote something in this blog for a while, I had writers block or whatever you call it and to top it off I was wracking my mind trying to force myself to write. I feel it's done ~~was~~ good to just let my mind take a some what break. Even though I wasn't totally free of "thinking" or doing "mind" work, it felt good not to worry about a weekly deadline of writing.

With this little 'vacation' I also thought about what it means to have a blog or 'platform' to expound thoughts. I say this cause often times I see TV and they talk about people's blogs. But to be honest a majority of the blogs that they show, the people are talking about simple stuff. Of course it's their stage and they should feel free to discuss, debate and tackle any subject or topic. I only wish with all sincerity that people will get a little more serious in their writings/posts.

It's ok to think about things for your self. It's another thing when people are exposed and pick up your thoughts. It's a even bigger squander to have thousands or even millions following some straight junk talk.