

- 1). In life there are truisms and in our search for life's truth we seem to forget, that one's accomplishments are an individualistic, step-by-step achievement.
- 2). There lies no difference between the receiver and giver. In truth there is only the receiver. For even the giver receives when giving.
- 3). Humans are like flower seeds, that need to be planted into a fertile environment and allowed to germinate and only when an individual has blossomed into a flower, is this person able to share the fragrance of that wisdom and truth upon another.
- 4). The wise make peace with friends, a fool makes peace with their enemies.
- 5). Surely it has been said: one learns best by teaching.
- 6). If I am Politically incorrect, it is because I am not Political.
- 7). Lack of communication breeds fear and hatred.
- 8). The psychological memory of a human is covered with superficial garbage.
- 9). Intellectual Self-Defense is forever the seed of enquiry and not merely accepting the truth of another as your own.
- 10). I am not trying to teach you anything, I am trying to unlearn you.
- 11). Love is sometimes liken to a pearl inside of a shell, one has to break the shell of its defenses to enjoy the tenderness of its enormous beauty.
- 12). Over the ages we have heard the teachings of many so-called prophets; Messengers of God (Mohammed); Reincarnated God (Buddha); and Son of God (Jesus) and it has failed to change and engender compassion within the hearts and minds of humankind. Humans are just as violent and destructive today as we have been since the beginning.
- 13). Living is more reflective than prospective.
- 14). If you aren't ready to accept the answer than don't ask the question.
- 15). Have you not noticed the hypnotic trance or frenzied behavior of those during a church sermon? And as they exit the church, they have this weak, slightly redrawn look as if they are in after-glow after sex. And the further away from the church you'll note that they start laughing and the blood seems to return to their brain and to their blank-eyed faces.
- 16). The potential (seed) of enlightenment lies within everyone, you need only allow it to grow inclusively. To trustingly enter into the fires of life without security, to be tried and trued by the friction of life, dropping all psychological crutches.
- 17). Truth is in the here/now, a constant uncovering and discovering liken to a refinement or increase in magnification; the closer one searches, the more clearer and greater truth is revealed and/or magnified. Liken to a distant star, the closer you get to the star the more it reveals itself in clarity and definition.
- 18). We see only those who have an abortion and fail to see those who participate in a world where abortions are being committed.
- 19). True love is liken to a double-edge sword, it heals and wounds; it frees you and enslaves you. It frees you from all others to make you its slave. One who is in love lies mortally wounded and lives in a state of ambulatory-convalescence, never quite recuperating.
- 20). The question only arises about what is, when you aren't.
- 21). Hope lies within self and not the other.
- 22). One need learn until learning becomes a teaching.
- 23). Each person remains their final frontier, their abiding mystery.
- 24). Truth and fact are not necessarily one in the same. Our truth is no more than our beliefs and our facts are our non-beliefs.
- 25). Our lives are a two for one exchange, one step in progress and two steps in regression. We are losing ground, we have not yet learned to be that which we idealistically seek to become (i.e., loving and caring).
- 26). Life is a contradiction and living-life is paradoxical, the ultimate dilemma.
- 27). The best must unite with the best to achieve: Better ($Y + B^2 = B$).
- 28). There cannot be empathy for another without sympathy for self.
- 29). Preparation for the unpreparable is found within the preparable. Prepare for tomorrow, by meeting the challenges of today. It is only in enduring today that will engender you with the endurance to endure tomorrow. In truth, how could it be otherwise? Living life is liken to a progression of steps. One simply cannot prepare for the unknown or the unknowable, without experiencing the known and the knowable. There lies no gap in existence. The unknown lies at the border of the known and can only be found through the known, they are the flip-side of the same coin; liken to an extension ladder. That is why you must experience, vicarious or otherwise, the known and the knowable to be able to have a solid footing, to figurative stand straight up, extending yourself into the unknown.
- 30). We are simply not balanced. Our evolutionary ratio of protecting and correcting, is at a deficit. A heightened consciousness will allow us to preserve and improve simultaneously within our lives, others, and the world we live in.
- 31). You are a rose in a weed garden, so there is much weeding needed to give you room to grow as an intelligent individual.
- 32). One's "responsibility" lies within the purview of one's "Responsibleness".
- 33). If one would change conditions, than one need change the ground within which the root-cause of the conditions lie.
- 34). Thinking is a process that can be mastered.
- 35). Whereas, one must question not only if the means will justify the ends, but rather, if the means will support the ends?
- 36). We were taught to wipe our bottoms and noses, but, we weren't taught to wipe the mess away from our minds in times of stress, tragedy and calamity.
- 37). Humans are beggars, begging the past to ensure us of the future.
- 38). Historically, Americans have been participants and not recipients.
- 39). Let the dead teach the dead and let us begin anew.
- 40). In refusing to do what's right you have done wrong.
- 41). The rights of the government extends no greater than consensus of its people.
- 42). We can no longer entertain the concept of "Collective Empowerment" as a means to social "equity".
- 43). In searching for the truth of my experience, you offer me only the truth of your beliefs, that which you have not even known. And you want me to follow in your ignorance (unknowingness).
- 44). Men buy sex out of expediency, when we have more money than time.
- 45). When you fail to do what's in your best interest, you have likewise failed to do what is in the best interest of others.
- 46). In life accept either victory or defeat; make surrender unthinkable and only as a means to survival. Plainly put, if your survival isn't at stake, seek victory or demand your defeat.
- 47). It can be said: He who has received your love is "guilty" of rape.
- 48). Yesterday's cures simply won't solve today's ills.
- 49). At any given time an individual is doing the very best that he or she can. No one deliberately does their worst, even if they are doing their worst.
- 50). It is not a contradiction to become that which you seek to destroy.
- 51). No one does wrong trying to do right, one does wrong trying not to do right. To do wrong in the pursuit of right is no less than a human err.
- 52). Truth isn't an object or a thought, it is a continuous feeling of unexplainable understanding of what is, as is.
- 53). As your understanding becomes greater, your interpretation of the facts shall become more precise.
- 54). Limited within these three words "WE DON'T KNOW" sums up the entire truth of humankind.
- 55). Truth teaches that one is in err to judge another by their actions. Reality teaches that an individual isn't their actions and if we are to be so foolish as to judge (alienate and ostracize) an individual by their actions, than we should even more harshly judge their environment (i.e., surroundings, equal opportunities and equal access).
- 56). Truth isn't horizontal, it is vertical, it doesn't necessarily stretch from yesterday into the future. Truth is no more than one's perception of the perceived facts in the here/now. If the facts of yesterday are the same as today, it is more likely than not that you'll arrive at the same truth as you did yesterday. Facts are held as durable while truth is individualistic and perceptual.
- 57). The failure of the Women's Liberation Movement will occur for the same reasons as the decline of male domination. It takes both genders to make a complete human being, neither can arbitrarily or unilaterally liberate themselves from the other.
- 58). Most of us fail in taking responsibility. In truth, we need only learn to be responsible, starting with the near (responsibleness) rather, than the far (responsibility). One's responsibility is limited within one's responsibleness, one only has a responsibility within the experience of self. In essence one has no responsibility to the other and need only interfere or assist the other when asked, or assist when it becomes apparent that your assistance is needed. Again, it is stressed, this responsibility is to the near and not the far. One's responsibleness within self determines one's responsibility to another.
- 59). Death and life are not opposites, in fact, they are inopposites. The alternative to life isn't death. Neither has anything in common with the other. Opposites infer that there is a relationship between the two. One complimenting the other. Life is not a means unto an end, rather, an end unto itself. Only dead things die, that which is alive has and will always be alive and living.
- 60). Power and knowledge are synonymous and only an unknowing mind would think that knowledge could be utilized without the power to implement its use.
- 61). Love is a phenomenon, it doesn't belong to the receiver or the giver, it is its own master and it comes to us unconditionally, without permission and it will leave us without permission. Yet, once we receive this gift of love, we attempt to possess it. And that is our failing, attempting to possess that which is un-possess-able and that which is beyond understanding.
- 62). I don't want you to help me, you need only take the time to understand yourself and in doing so, you will have helped me and all others in the Universal sense, by taking responsibility for self. Thereby, becoming a responsible individual and not becoming a burden on others.
- 63). Each step takes me one step into the unknown and two steps away from the known.
- 64). Look outwardly for knowledge and inwardly for understanding.
- 65). Can you not imagine two roads taking you to the same destination? Likewise, there is more than one road to search for one's truth. Concern yourself not with the number of roads that are traveled and more with the road you need travel.
- 66). You are not what you see, in fact you have never seen you. Your eyes see outwardly, not inwardly. And the mirror is only a poor reflection of self.
- 67). You have not known death, you have only known life. You have no reason to suspect that you are not life and that all that you will ever know is life.
- 68). In times of tragedy one must look AWAY FROM THE PROBLEM and reflect on one's individual day to day activities and there lies the first step: the near (self) and not the far (the problem); in responding to the crisis. It has always been the near in reaching the solution to the problem.
