If you've been keeping an eye on the headlines, you may have been shocked by the many reports of murder, assaults, revelations of wrongful convictions & botched executions. It's been open season on minorities, especially black Americans. (Jordan Davis; Trayvon Martin; Antonio Yarbough; Central Park Five; West Memphis Three). The Criminal Justice System has systemically depleted black America's population through mass incarceration, disenfranchisement & murder. The prisons in Pennsylvania are bursting at the seams with minorities serving disproportionate drug sentences that has finally been revised after 30 years of overreaching. Then there's minorities serving time for crimes they didn't commit, because it seems the prosecutors had withheld some pertinent information that proved the convicted to be innocent. Next, you have the police shooting unarmed suspects & beating the crap out of restrained suspects and getting away with it. Then you have racist murderers claiming self-defense after they had initiated the deadly encounter resulting in them getting away with murdering an unarmed black teen.

The Jordan Davis murder trial really hurt my heart, because they let that man get away with murder. All Michael Dunn did was claim to have perceived a threat, and instead of calling the police he opened fire then claimed self-defense. If a black person would've tried to claim something like that, they would've been thrown under the prison. This man fired 10 rounds of heat into a car load of teenagers, and when he was done he put the gun back into the glove compartment. When his fiancée returned to the car, he said nothing about the perceived threat or of what happened. He drove to the hotel and ordered a pizza. The next day he sees the report on the shooting, hears that someone was dead, and drove home still not contacting the police. The police never learned of the possibility of the victim having a gun until the police arrested & interviewed Dunn. No gun or any corroborating evidence of a gun was ever found.
