

Reply ID 1608

Louis,

6-3-14

Thank you for the kind words, it's always nice to hear from people in the world - a reminder that it's still out there somewhere. 😊

Yeah, this new facility is a lot less forgiving of tattoo work, so to avoid going to the hole on a continuous basis I've had to close my shop.

I had hoped to keep drawing to support myself, it was one of the biggest reasons for my starting this blog site - I had hoped to generate some interest to card companies, book illustrations, or even tattoo shops interested in buying pages of flash -

I figured I needed $50 to $100 weekly to support myself and not have to scrounge.

But it was not meant to be, so I got a job in the metal shop here and drawing has fallen to the curb side.

Maybe someday things will change and I'll be in a position to quit the metal shop and pick the pencil and paper back up.

I encourage you to keep drawing as much as possible - post some of your stuff - feedback is encouragement, encouragement is food for creativity, Creativity is the expression of life.

Take care and be well

Daniel W. VanDeBogart
<http://betweenthebars.org/blogs/906/>