

Nationalism a Politically Acceptable Goal for all Except the Japhetic Peoples

The stated objective of 'Sons of Japheth' is the building of a movement towards the establishment of a Japhetic Theocratic Monarchy. Such a political goal is undoubtedly Nationalistic in nature. Nationalism is defined as a political system formed for the governance, defense, unity, and maintenance of a nation for an exclusive, well defined people. It is not imperial in nature, wishing to subjugate, exploit, or harm other peoples, but merely to serve the interests and safeguard a distinct people, establishing a homeland where we may be free from all who might attempt to abuse us and do us harm, either domestically or abroad.

We live in a nation that claims we have a right to our political beliefs and political expression, yet White people who hold nationalistic beliefs are subjected to intense accusations of racism and guilt trips to deter us from pursuing what almost every other people in the world have, or are fighting for: a homeland and government for their people. Yet none of these are labeled racists or bigots. Most of these are not the targets of tax-payer funded FBI launched COINTELPRO operations designed to infiltrate, criminalize, and destroy such nationalistic aims.

The nations of the West have largely embraced a Masonic policy of multiculturalism. 1 in 8 American citizens are foreign born. The nations of Europe are overrun with foreigners, both legal and illegal. South Africa has been destroyed and Australia soon will be. The entire Western world has flung open its doors to the world. The Japhetic peoples whose innate characteristics have defined the West for thousands of years are being overwhelmed and drowned out in their own lands and the former nations of Christendom have developed an identity unlike anything it has ever resembled in the past. Such were the very aims of the French Revolution: to completely sever a people from any connection with Tradition or contact with its historical, cultural past. Soon the West will resemble the rest of the third world nations because a nation is a reflection of the people who inhabit it, and not vice-versa. We are now in the process of displacement and replacement.

Meanwhile, while we are surrendering our identity and collective right to self-determination, the rest of the world has been unifying their peoples and solidifying nations and governments to represent and defend them. Upon the British withdrawal from India after WWII, the Muslims and Hindus decided they needed separate nations and governments to secure and advance each others exclusive goals and interests. In 1947, two nations were formed, the Muslim nation, in which the Muslim refugees flocked to, broke away from the mainland and renamed itself 'Pakistan'. while the Hindus went east and retained the name 'India'. Each have separate governments. In 1948, the Jewish people, a people without a home or government, emigrated in droves to Palestine and formed the nation state of 'Israel', a Jewish nation for the Jewish people. In 2011, the Black South Sudanese, who were a minority in Arab Muslim dominated Sudan, seeing their interests were not served by the majority government in Khartoum, seceded and formed their very own nation of 'South Sudan', independent of 'Sudan'. The Saudis, after WWI, while fighting a guerilla war against the Ottomans, created the kingdom of 'Saudi Arabia', for the Saudi Arabian people. The former nations of Yugoslavia, in 1999, seeing the deep rooted inherent differences between their peoples, fought and reformed into 7 distinct separate nations. Christian 'Serbia' and Muslim 'Bosnia' were but two of the culturally homogenous nations that were created out of the arrangement.

Nationalism is not racist, nor bigotted. It's the logical political destination for a collective group of people with similar values, beliefs, goals, and outlooks to desire to further mutual interests through a nation-state. It's a collective form of self-determination. It's a collective form of cultural projection and expression.

This must be our goal. WE must not let the name calling of the opposition deter us from what is a universally recognized 'just cause' for the rest of the tribes of the world. We must not let the demonization of people with our goals and beliefs in the Hollywood, media, entertainment or public educational industries deceive us into believing that we are wrong for wanting the liberty and defense of our own people. We must not compromise on this goal simply because at this time we are in a position of political unpopularity and political weakness and unable to do the right thing that we will to do and would do if we had the power to do so. We have 'right' on our side, the 'wrong' side has the might/ to abandon the 'right' side simply because of its weakness, and join the majority that we know to be wrong simply because they have the strength to continue to implement their wicked will and commit abuses and tyranny in unconscionable. That is the epitome of cowardice. It takes courage to stand for a losing side that has justice and truth on its side. It takes courage to stand for the underdog. We can become strong if we have right on our side, but it is next to impossible to join a tyranny and convince it to abandon a course of injustice for one of righteousness. "Fight to the death for Truth, and the Lord God will fight for you." (Sirach 4:28).

People point to the Civil War as an excuse that a secessionist movement could never succeed in America. Yet they are overlooking the fact that several secessionist movements throughout the world have succeeded and that the reasons for the failures of the Confederacy in the Civil War to secede in 1861-1865 no longer exist today. We live in a drastically different world today than then.

Most secessionist movements make "the right of self-determination of nations"- the right of independence- the justification behind their actions. This is an internationally recognized right explicitly spelled out in the United Nations Charter. As recently as July 22, 2010, the UN International Court ruled on a successful secessionist movement in Kosovo that "no general prohibition may be inferred from the practice of the Security Council with regard to declarations of independence" and "General international law contains no prohibition on declarations of independence." This means that, according to the U.N. , a secessionist movement is not illegal by international standards, nor would we experience an international opposition if such a declaration were declared in the U.S. We would simply face opposition from the US government. Even Washington recognizes this. During the same UN court proceedings, the US government issued the following written statements on April 17, 2009: "Declarations of independence may, and often do, violate domestic legislation. However, this does not make them violations of international law."

The major difference between a modern, Japhetic secessionist movement and the Confederate secession during the Civil War is one of the motivations of potential allies. No secessionist movement and/or its opposition occurs as an isolated incident. Several other powers are involved with distinct geopolitical interests. During the 1999 breakup of Yugoslavia, for instance, it was in Germany's interest to support the break way of Slovenia and Croatia into separate, sovereign nations that could and would, join then join Germany's sphere of influence and help support the advancement of her interests. Therefore, she supported, armed, and aided their efforts in seceding from Yugoslavia by attacking Serbia, the leading and controlling state of Yugoslavia. The United States also, seeing her interests served at the expense of Serbia, repeatedly waged a bombing campaign on the capital of Serbia, pounding them into submission and forcing them to relinquish sovereign territory by allowing Croatia and Slovenia to depart and form their own nations..

Such incidents are not entirely alien to the political history of the United States of America. During WWI, as Germany was fighting US allies overseas and struggling with the strength they derived from US support, Germany recognized that it was in her immediate interests to support a secessionist movement in the southwestern US to divide and weaken US power and thus the aid that it could lend to its allies in Europe. Germany telegraphed its ambassador in Mexico proposing that if Mexico would engage the US in harrasing, time, and expense consuming raids along the southern US border, that Germany would do all in its power for Mexico to reclaim parts of the southwestern United States that once belonged to Mexico. Known as the 'Zimmerman telegraph', the proposition was intercepted by US intelligence agents and used to justify formal US involvement in WWI.

The funding of domestic dissidents and internal secessionist movements by foreign governments in conflict with a nations mainstream political establishment is a simple reality in today's (and yesterdays) geopolitical world. Given the clearly irrefutable fact that Washington has belligerently trampled on the rights, interests, and sovereign integrity of an ever increasing multitude of nations of the world, it is not an illogical deduction to assume that many of these nations, themselves not strong enough to directly engage US military might, yet in need of weakening, if ever so slightly, US political power to maintain and advance their respective interests in their immediate spheres of influence, would be willing, and able, to aid and support a domestic dissident group such as 'Somns of Japheth'. For those desiring liberty and the maintenance of their own cultural and political integrity, and willing to court the necessary support from other world powers, there are definite potentialities waiting to be tapped. For those willing to sacrifice and work for a better future for our families and children, a better way, a possible way, does exist for those ready to expend the necessary effort.

Nationalism for European-Americans may be culturally frowned upon in todays society, but, seriously, considering matters, any pride in, or desire to protect, or advance the interests of our people is subject to the targetting and attack of todays cultural elites. Our only option to appease their insatiable desire to demoralize and punish us for past wrongs, or even falsely concocted wrongs, is a complete submission to slavery. Slavery by any other name is still slavery. As US president Bill Clinton told a jeering crowd of California college kids, "Today, in California, white people are a minority. My only regret is that I may not live long enough to see them as a minority in all of America!" The college kids cheered! This and many other statements like it can be found in the book 'The Death of the West' by Patrick J. Buchanan, a presidential advisor to 3 different US presidents. Now, regardless of the current unpopularity of White, Japhetic Nationalism, we really have no other choice other than to face elimination or almagamation as that appears to be the only consistent policy of the Masonic government in Washington. Sons of Japheth offers a solution, and with your support, would like to show how that is not only possible, but also to move us, as a people, in that direction. But we cannot do this alone. We need your help. Please contact Sons of Japheth or donate funds or equipment today if you see the political necessity for what we advocate.

BIBLICAL HISTORY AND PROPHECY

Many of the passages in the prophets concerning mass movements of peoples and major international wars to occur in the future are indecipherable to the layman not prepared to learn just who Isaiah, Ezekial, or Jeremiah are referring to when they speak about Tarshish, Ashkenaz, or Kittim moving against the Holy Land, or fighting against this or that people. Certainly few, if any, of the nations descended from these peoples go by the Hebrew names given to their ancestors in the Bible. With much effort and study, however, the identities of these ancient peoples, and their modern descendants, can be traced. A ton of evidence exists to establish these bloodlines. To save space and time only a small amount of evidence will be examined and only the offspring of Japheth, son of Noah, will be focused on.

Several ancient apocryphal (non-cannonical) books written and maintained by the temple priests of ancient Israel record the history of God's dealings with the post-diluvian world. Both Joshua 10:13 and 2 Samuel 1:18 relate: "...it is written in the book of Jasher...". The Book of Jasher, only one of several ancient apocryphal works, parallels biblical history, only in a lot more detail. Obviously the writers of the Bible considered it an authority in light of the aforementioned canonical passage, and indeed, they referred us to it! The Book of Jubilees, a 1st century commentary on Genesis and Exodus is another such work. It also records God's dealings with and subsequent histories of other, non-Israelitic nations. In Jubilees 15:23, it is written: "There are many nations...all are His, and over all has He appointed spirits to rule...but over Israel...He alone is their ruler." It also traces migrations of the Biblical national patriarchs mentioned in Genesis chapter 10. It states, authoritatively, in one section, that the Hamitic peoples were assigned by God to Africa. In fact, these apocryphal works are treasure troves of information in tracing biblical peoples across the globe and establishing their modern identities.

The Jewish Talmud, Judaism's most sacred collection of Holy books, comprising 36 books and enough to fill a 12ft bookcase shed even more light on biblical peoples' histories. It is based on Mosaic Law, both Oral (Mishnah) and written (Torah) and records teachings from priests and rabbis as far back as Moses. Regarding Gentile nations, it refers in Sanhedrin 56a-56b to "Noahide Laws", or laws that God gave to all other Gentile nations, not in conformity with Judaism or Mosaic Law, but definitely religious law. Perhaps these are the result of the spirits that God appointed to rule over these foreign nations, until Christ came to redeem them. Statements from the early Christian authorities show a remarkable familiarity with such teachings. St. Clement, the fourth Pope, who died in the early Christian era, around 100 AD and is mentioned in Phillipians 4:3 stated, "For so it is written 'When the Most High divided the nations, When He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the nations according to the number of His angels...' (1 Clement 13:7). It is again evident from this statement, and others like it, that early Christians, read, studied, and learned from several non-canonical apocryphal works.

The peoples of Europe are descended from the Japhetic offspring. The Bible lists 15 people, including Japheth, in that bloodline. (Gen 10:2-5) (1 Chr 1:4-5). His seven sons were Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech and Tiras. Josephus, a Jewish chief priest, and the last to retrieve the sacred scrolls from the burning temple during its destruction in 70 AD by the Romans, wrote several works, the largest, the 'Antiquities of the Jews', in which he assimilates the entire Jewish history up to his time from the scattered writings of all the priest and historians into one monumental work. In Ant. 1:6:1, he gives the following identities, current to the first century AD, to the seven sons of Japheth: Gomer = Galatians/Gauls; Magog = Scythians; Madai = Medes; Javan = Ionia/Greeks; Tubal = Iberes; ~~yet~~ Meshech = Cappadocians; Tiras = Thracians. This is simply one more source of info connecting the bloodlines of Europeans to the Biblical Japheth. The ancient documents of the nations of Ireland and Scotland confirm Josephus' identifications. The nation now known as Ireland was once known to history as 'Scotia'. As Celts/Irish immigrants invaded the modern day nation of Scotland, another Rig Dial (kingdom) was formed, known as Scotia Minor. The original Scotia then became known as 'Scotia Major', and, in time, dropped the name altogether and simply became known as 'Ireland'. Scotia Minor then fought against, assimilated and amalgamated the occupant Pictish nation and together they collectively became known as 'Scotland'. From secular sources, however, both the Scots and the Picts can be shown ultimately to have been descended from Japheth.

Nennius, a British monk and historian, in the 9th century, concerning the Irish, wrote that the Scots came to Ireland "1002 years after Egypt drowned in the Red Sea." In the ancient "Chronicles of the Picts, Scots, and other early manuscripts", translated by WF Skene, it is recorded that the Scots, through the genealogy of William the Lion, who was descended from "Gaideus son of Nevil- 22nd generation from Jafeth"- who was a a nobleman from Scythia that married Scotta, daughter of pharaoh, the king of Egypt, and then travelled through Spain into Ireland.

The Picts, one of the nations comprising the original inhabitants of Scotland, also are descendants of the Scythians, or the Biblical Magog. In one of the oldest Pictish documents, the "Pictish Chronicle" (971-95 AD), trans. by WF Skene, they are traced genealogically back to "Jafeth, son of Noah." According to St. Bede in the Ecclesiastical History of the English People written between 673-735 AD, the Picts were supposed to have come by sea from Scythia, landing initially in Northern Ireland, but were ordered to depart from there by the Irish, who suggested that they settle the land across the channel (in modern day Scotland). At the time, the Scythians were a small band of men that had no women with them, so they obtained wives for themselves from the Irish upon the condition that their kings would forever after be chosen through the female line. They then departed and formed the Pictish nation in Scotland. This is recounted in depth in the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle'- one of the oldest historical documents written in England, concerning the history of the British Isles.

The Babylonian Talmud, the holiest collection of books of Judaism, also confirm the descent of Europeans from the Biblical Japheth. In passage after passage in any one of the several books comprising the Talmud, statements can be found such as the following: Talmud- Purim 9b- "God will grant beauty to Japheth..." sidenote- 'reflects beauty of Greek culture' (the Talmud: a selection! Norman Solomon) Again, this is but one of the verses in the massive collection of Jewish Holy books that confirm the Japhetic patriarchy of the European, White peoples of the world.

Completely unrelated, and uninfluenced secular histories further confirm the accuracy of Jewish records. In the Antiquities of the Jews sec 1:6:1, Josephus also connects Javans (Ionians/Greeks) son Kittim with the island nation of Cyprus. Indeed, biblical references to Kittim would certainly support that understanding. (eg. Ge 10:4; 1 Chr. 1:7; Nu 24:24; Isa 23:1,12; Jer 2:10; Eze 27:6; Dan 11:300. But if one takes a map of the modern nation of Cyprus, on the southeastern coast one will find a 'Cape Kiti', possibly a relic of a time when the inhabitants of the island still identified with their biblical ancestor Kittim. This is not a modern phonetical coincidence. The connection is ancient. Thucydides, an Athenian general in the 5th century BC, in his history of the Peloponnesian Wars", writes concerning a theater of combat that took place on the way to, and in, Egypt, : "...sixty of these [Athenian Warships] were detached to Egypt at the insistence of Amyrtaeus, the king in the marches; the rest laid siege to Kitium (in Cyprus), from which, however..." emphasis mine).

It is beyond the scope of this article to extensively quote each and every instance of Biblical, secular, and religious (Jewish, Christian, or Pagan) literature that connects the White, European peoples of the world to the Biblical Japheth and his seven sons. The numerous sources listed herein were quoted merely to give a few of the existant examples of the evidence that does exist to satisfy the historical curiosity or encourage further research by readers who have an interest or desire to trace the lineage of our peoples. We have a unique, common, and recorded history. That history is written in the souls and collective psych of each one of us. Collectively, our story is still being written. Right now, due to our historical embrace of the Risen Lord, Jesus Christ, and our recent apostasy, we have become the target of worldwide demonic attacks who wish to wipe our bloodlines off the face of the earth. Today, we are taught that we are not even a people, and have no history. Hopefully, this article goes a little way in putting that lie to the test. Hopefully, with the Grace of God, we can awaken a sense of solidarity in our brethren and reinvigorate a desire in them to survive.

Charlemagne and 'Forced Conversions'

The enemies of the Faith have dedicated huge amounts of time and resources into slandering the champions of our Brotherhood and distorting history out of all context in an attempt to demonize our Catholic forbears and to sever us from any connection to, or pride in, our Spiritual and cultural heritage. They judge historical events by present day standards and thereby condemn the actions of peoples who made the best decisions that circumstances could afford given the conditions that those decisions were forced to be made under. They even have a name for this false, fictionalized history, dubbing it "Revisionist History". The ways and means that the Modernists rewrite and reconstruct this alternate history and thereby draw perverse philosophical concepts they wish to apply to modern day scenarios has been extensively researched by the Church and explained in depth by St. Pius X in his encyclical Pascendi Dominici Gregis (On Modernism), paragraphs #'s 30-33 on September 8, 1907. This is just one of the tools of deception that the agents of Satan use to delude the sons of men in the modern world and thereby ensnare them to do his will.

One of the most prevalent errors engrafted into the public consciousness is that of the so-called wars of forced conversions waged by the Catholics against non-believers. Perhaps the single most falsely vilified target of such calumnies is the Catholic leader and first Holy Roman Emperor, Charlemagne, or Charles the Great. Called by many the 'Father of Modern Europe', he hammered an empire out of the chaotic warring tribes of post Roman Europe that extended from the Pyrenees and Islamic-enslaved Spain throughout the territories of modern day France and Germany and encompassing much of Western Europe except the British Isles and Scandinavia. Later in his reign, he was crowned Holy Roman Emperor by the Pope on Christmas Day in 800 AD.

Inheriting his kingdom from his father and a long line of royalty (which included Clovis, king of the Franks, who was the first of the barbarian kings to be baptised in 496 AD), he began his reign as king of the minor tribe of Franks amidst hostile surrounding kingdoms and tribes seeking for any sign of weakness as an opportunity to invade and enslave his people. One of these peoples were the Saxons, a Germanic people who were followers of what we would today call Norse Mythology or Odinism. But their religion was no mythology to them as it governed all aspects of their daily lives and national policy. It was as true to them as the delusion of Communism is to the Chinese today. It was as true to them as the multi-cultural, Babylonian secularism is to the nations of the West today. Such are but one of the people Charlemagne is today accused of forcing to submit to Catholicism.

Yet the Saxons and their Viking allies were the primary aggressors in the wars that were to follow. Odinism demanded the barbarous practices of human sacrifice to satisfy the tenets of their religion, as well as raids and robberies perpetuated upon nations that were outside that of their own. Additionally, according to their beliefs, the only way men could gain entrance into Valhalla, their version of heaven, was if they died a violent death on the field of battle and thereby had an open wound whereby their souls could escape their bodies to be gathered up by warrior-maidens, called Valkyries, and whisked away to an eternity of feasting and revelry in a warrior banquet hall. With neighbor nations harboring such beliefs, obviously, peace became completely impossible.

Wars inevitably followed. Whereas Charlemagne was devoutly Catholic and mandated weekly Mass attendance, fasting from meat on Fridays as a penance for the sins of the people of his kingdom and other pious practices that in no way harmed or threatened the lives of neighboring peoples, the religious practices of the Odinists, as mentioned above, required the constant death, destruction and enslavement of the subjects of his own kingdom. The Arabs, to the south, also demanded a great deal of his attention, as they had already conquered and enslaved Spain in 711 AD and were in the process of ing the same to the Franks until Charlemagne's grandfather, Charles Martel, defeated them on Frankish soil in 722 AD. As the ruler appointed by God over his people, it became Charlemagne's duty to protect them and defend his borders.

A defensive war is completely ineffective if a general merely waits for attacks from an enemy and then allows them to retreat across an imaginary line to a base from which they can plan and execute future attacks at will. Such became the case with the Viking raids. At some point, Charlemagne was forced to engage them on the field of battle, which he did, defeating them again and again in a war which they had initiated and maintained against his attempts of peaceful reconciliation.

It eventually became apparent that peace was impossible as long as the northern men harbored such erroneous beliefs that mandated perpetual wars of destruction. Two options became apparent for peace, either a complete war of attrition must be waged in which one of the two peoples must cease to exist or one of the nations beliefs must change. Truth is not relative. There is an absolute Truth, and there are definite errors, or deviations from that Truth. Error and deception, as clearly experienced in this case, had very real, destructive consequences. To protect his people, the followers of such delusions had to be destroyed or converted, or at the very least, deterred from unjustly attacking his kingdom. Deterrence became impossible, as has been stated above, the Vikings were ready to die for the religion of their forefathers to gain entrance into Valhalla. Perhaps Charlemagne should have satisfied their desire by sending them all off to Valhalla in one single decisive battle and thereby achieving peace. That option was certainly available to them. No doubt the liberal critics of today would have found fault with Charlemagne had he pursued that course as well.

At some point in the execution of the war that the Vikings, time and again, and in every instance, initiated, they began to see the folly of their beliefs. They began to see the leniency and wisdom of Charlemagne's alternate option. They began to understand that no nation on earth was going to allow themselves to be continually attacked unprovoked, then allow their antagonists to call off the war at their leisure, as soon as conditions became unfavorable, and to resume hostilities as soon as they became ready and willing to do so. In modern times, as well, when the world community sees such an ungovernable threat, as in Nazi Germany or Communist Russia, powers combine to neutralize those threats. This is exactly what Charlemagne did. Mustering his forces, he crossed into Saxon territory and engaged their armies until they sued for peace.

Once they realized the incompatibility of their beliefs to allow them to survive among other peoples, and given an ultimatum, they converted to Christianity. This was an acceptable condition of peace for Charlemagne. He could have enslaved their entire nation, but he did not; he could have incorporated their lands into his kingdom, yet he neither did that. His primary purpose in his wars against the Vikings was the defense and security of his people. Upon the Vikings embrace of Christianity, he believed that he achieved that aim. At that point, Charlemagne showed extreme leniency and mercy to his enemies, allowing them their lives and freedom, and led his armies home. Periodically, from time to time, the Saxons would slaughter their priests and monks, torch their churches, and unprovoked, once again attack Charlemagne's empire. And time and time again, Charlemagne would engage them in the war that they initiated, as their resurrected Norse beliefs mandated that they must die in battle. Back and forth this scenario repeated itself, the Norse and the Saxons beginning wars, Charlemagne ending them with victory and granting mercy and penance to the defeated Saxons and Norse. Multiple times they renounced their pagan ways and embraced Christianity. Others farther to the North, such as the Norwegians and the Swedes, retained their Norse religion. Charlemagne had no need to attack or 'forcibly convert' them as his lands were not immediately threatened by them at the time.

Such is the history of the Catholics so called 'wars of conversion'.

ake note of the fact that there would have been no war had they not been repeatedly attacked. Also take note of the fact that the purpose of the war was not to convert, but to secure the defense of the Frankish Kingdom. Without a constant threat on their borders, the Saxons could have kept their pagan religion indefinitely, for all the Franks cared.

The most glaring contradiction in the thoughts and logic of the critics, is that they don't discourage, but actually support, similar policies conducted by world governments of today. Recognizing the dangers of a nation governed by the beliefs inherent in Nazi Germany, the world united not only in defeating the Weimar Republic into submission, but afterwards even forcibly making them alter their beliefs and political ideology and the ideals they taught to their children through their public educational system. Recognizing the folly of the political ideology of Communism, the entire Western world combined resources and military might to prevent such erroneous beliefs that continually promote, incite, and agitate wars and worldwide revolutions from taking root in, and controlling, the hearts and minds of entire nations of peoples. The critics of Catholicism who support policies appear to condemn forced conversions with their lips, while simultaneously implementing such forced conversions with their rifles. The waging of wars in Vietnam, Spain, or Korea to prevent the indoctrination of communism into a willing and susceptible populace is exactly the interest that motivated Charlemagne to war against the Saxons. Odinism was a spiritual and ideological threat to him and his people.

It appears that the main point of contention is not that people are forced to embrace or abandon deeply rooted beliefs and religions, but which beliefs are the absolutely TRUE ones. Joseph Stalin, the Communist dictator of Russia, and Mao Tsung, the Communist ruler of China, holding the tenets of Marxism and Maoism to be true, showed no qualms about forcing opponents to submit and profess a belief in their doctrines. By their own government statistics, the Soviet Union under Stalin massacred up to 46 million of their own people for the greater good of political uniformity or forced conversion to Communism. Red China, under Mao, liquidated a horrendous 72 million of their own countrymen and in their much praised 'Cultural Revolution' not only destroyed the religious adherents of the equally false ideologies of Buddhism and Hinduism, but even purged the land of temples, statues, idols, and any other remnants of their erroneous religions throughout their country. For all the condemnation of our Christian leader Charlemagne, their actions in forcibly altering the beliefs of continents of unwilling peoples cause the minor acts of Charlemagne to be paled in comparison.

The current diabolical Masonic nations of the West are equally guilty in this contest of waging wars of forced conversions upon the minds of resistant populaces. For those who openly and defiantly profess a belief in the reality of racial differences or pride and solidarity with our Japhetic brethren throughout the world, we are the target of hate-crime prosecutions, hate-speech prosecutions, forced integration in housing communities with those who hate us, loss of government jobs, and, as we are currently witnessing in the Paula Deen case of June/2013, or the Donald Sterling case of April/2014, we are witnessing that people who harmlessly harbor such private political beliefs in the privacy of their own homes and hearts are even being denied the right to private ownership of property. Right wing conservatives are denied prestigious University professorships, and Nationalists are denied television and radio licensing from the F.C.C. (Federal Communications Commission) who determine licensing criteria based on the so-called "fairness doctrine". If a group's beliefs aren't deemed "fair" according to the state sponsored censor, the F.C.C., they are denied a license and right to speak. Similar Catholic Christian attacks and persecutions are also slowly beginning to materialize as well. It is hard to see how this is labelled as anything other than a 'forced conversion' of the American populace when the only way to alleviate the attacks experienced is complete submission and the adoption and profession of mainstream political, religious, and ideological beliefs, even though they, in many cases, are demonstrably false!

A WORLD WITHOUT GRACE

Jesus Christ is our Life, and that Life is the Light of men. (Jn. 1:4-5). Without Divine, Supernatural Grace, mankind is bestial and corrupt. Without Grace, men are little better than animals, being motivated and driven by primal instincts and urges such as lusts, hatreds, greed and ambition. The Grace of God enables us to overcome these impulses to sin within us and do the right thing when we will to do it. Graces empower us with the spiritual virtues of Discipline, Loyalty, Faith, Charity and Sacrifice. Without Grace we are unable to do any good at all. God is the source of all Grace and the source of all righteousness., and the more our faces are turned towards Him, the more His Light shines down into our souls and reflects His beauty from within us.

The Church has always taught that it is impossible to committ good or to resist evil without the Grace of God. A heretical priest, named Pelagius, taught in the early 5th centutry that mankind, by free will alone, and unaided by divine grace, could perform good acts and effect the salvation of his own soul. In 418 AD, the Council of Carthage condemned Pelggianism as a heresy. His main argument, like the argument of many agnostics and atheists today, was that even non-believers appear, at times, to committ good acts and to be good people. But, the LORD "makes His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends rain on the just and the unjust." Matt 5:45. Even in the garden of Eden, after Adam and Eve were stripped of Divine Grace and found naked, humiliated and ashamed, God, in His mercy, temporarily clothed their shame with animal skins. So today, He allows a small amount of Grace to touch the souls of mankind so that we can perform some good and see His presence in the world, and hopefully, turn towards Him and run towards the light.

The more believers there are who pray and seek Him call down more Graces upon the just and the unjust alike around them. The more numerous the sinners and abominable sins committed the greater the clouds of obstruction are constructed between God and a people and the less Grace reaches a land. (Lam 3:44). Indeed, for the sins of Apostasy, in the days of Elijah, the rain was withheld from the land for three years! (1 Kin. 17,18) Finally, the prayers of Elijah penetrated the dark clouds of sinfulness, and Graces of repentance and Faith rained down upon the Israelites.

The same scenario has been repeated hitorically throughout the worldd again and again. As ancient Europe, for example, which was a land of butchery, savagery, and lawlessness embraced a Faith in Christ and became converted to His One True Church, Graces of goodness, peace, and righteousness slowly began to seep into the souls of the Japhetic peoples of Christendom. Other nations and peoples also, as they embraced Christ and rejected Pagan and diabolical ideologies were also transferred out of the darkness and into the Light.

Yet the reverse has also occured. As a people lose their Faith, less and less Divine Grace reaches the inhabitants of a land, the more stripped of virtue they become, the more naked and shamed they appear to themselves and the world around them and the less able they find themselves to do the good they will to do and resist the evil. Numerous examples of this phenomenon exist in recorded history.

In 70 AD, during the Roman seige of Jerusalem, thousands of eyewitnesses experienced one such example. As the Jewish people rejected the Lord and He provided the foreknowledge that unless they repented, the kingdom of God would be taken from them and given to another people and that the Temple and Holy City would be trampled underfoot and destroyed, His prophecy seemed ripe to occur. One night during the seige, a bright light was seen in and around the Temple and numerous mysterious voices were heard, one of which said "Let us depart from this place!". The massive metal temple gate was seen to open of it's own accord and the light was seen to have departed heavenward after having shone for up to three hours in the Temple from no apparent source. The priests understood that the Glory of the Lord had departed from Israel. Both Jewish and Roman sources witnessed and recorded this phenomenon. Josephus, an eyewitness Jewish chief priest and historian recorded it in detail in his book about the Jewish-Roman war.

Upon the withdrawal of Divine Grace, Josephus, who was a captive collaborator with the Romans, personally interviewed literally hundreds of witnesses who fled from what can only be described as a living hell. AS the presence of God departed from men's souls, they came to resemble the very devils themselves. Reports of women roasting and eating their children, of soldiers robbing and disembowling each other along with any who tried to escape the city, reports of the gruffest of soldiers engaging in rape and homosexuality, dressing as women with painted faces and butchering all who came in their paths and so many more abnormal atrocities that exceed the abilities of the pen to describe. Such is the effect when God, the source of Divine Grace, without which no good can be accomplished, departs from the hearts of men.

A similar phenomenon occurred in Constantinople in 1453. For hundreds of years the Ottoman Turks chiseled away at the Christian Byzantine Empire, which was centered on Constantinople. As the people became more sinful and turned away from the Lord, the Grace which enabled them to resist the infidel also was turned away. On several previous occasions when the Islamic armies stood outside the very gates of Constantinople, powerful relics of the saints were brought out, such as the robe of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and marched along the city's walls, transmitting divine grace into the city's defenders enabling them to resist the invaders. Several times supernatural events occurred to drive the heathen from the very threshold of the city of the Holy Faith.

One night, surrounded by the heathen enemies, a similarly mysterious light was seen illuminating the city's most Holy Church, the Hagia Sophia. The first Christian emperor, Constantine, began construction on the Cathedral, the primary see of all the Orthodox Churches after their secession from Rome in 1054 AD. Upon its completion by a latter emperor, it was said to have surpassed the glory of the former Jerusalem Temple, the reported words being, "Solomon, I have surpassed thee!"

After the light, whose source was unexplainable to eyewitnesses and historians from both Christian and Muslim lines, remained for some time, it was seen to fly heavenward. The priests knew that the Glory of God had departed. Sudden storms raged through the city. A procession winding through the city carrying the city's most sacred Icon of the Blessed Virgin was cut short as abnormally strong winds forced the Icon from the hands of its bearers and into the mud. Heavens displeasure was all too evident to the city's inhabitants.

To be fair, the light of heaven had been diminishing upon the land of the Byzantine Empire for some time. The months and years preceding its downfall were becoming increasingly more frequent in scandals, corruptions and palace intrigue. The morality of the people also had been in a steady state of decline. As less Grace shined down into men's souls, they became more and more enslaved to sinful impulses, being addicted and dominated by unnatural lusts, greed, and covetousness. Shedding the garment of the Holy Spirit they received at baptism, men began to resemble beast more than men.

In 1453, the judgement of God fell upon the land. The Islamic invaders, at long last, breached the city's walls, slaughtering, raping, pillaging and burning at will. The Christians were either killed or shackled and enslaved. The women and children were sold as sex slaves while the strong men were sentenced to a lifetime of labor and toil for their muslim overlords. Forsaking and turning from the One True God, the Byzantines were found to be empty and broke inside their souls, and unable to resist the infernal enemy.

y, the former nations of Christendom have likewise embarked on a path of departure from Our Lord. Rejecting our only source of strength, we can see our people becoming weaker and weaker as they are slowly brought under the control of the flesh. As the Grace that reaches our souls diminishes, we see sinful acts and pastimes becoming more and more mainstream as our sins create clouds of opposition between us and our God. Will we, like the Byzantines, or the Israelites before them, recognize our folly and turn back to our Lord, or, like them, will we serve as yet another example to a future people, a warning for what happens to a people who forsake their Lord and turn from their only source of salvation? Only time, and our decisions will tell.

RELATED NEWS MAY 2014

- Donald Sterling, the owner of the NBA Las Angeles Clippers, was exposed as using racist statements in a heated conversation with his black/hispanic girlfriend which was later leaked to the news media. He was immediately lambasted by multiple news outlets and public officials including President Barack Obama. The NBA severely fined him and banned him for life from the NBA. They now are forcing him to sell his team.

Restrictions on freedom of speech and private thoughts and political beliefs only apply to whites under the Masonic government of the USA. Numerous black celebrities and comedians regularly insult and profess a hatred to or for white people with no repercussions or loss of constitutional rights to private property or crippling fines. On 4/29, the Micheal Berry Show, an AM talk show program reminded listeners that Charles Barkley had said that he hated white people multiple times with no 2.5 million dollar fine or even public censure. also on 4/29, Chris Crock reported NBA owner Mark Cuban as questioning what other political censures would bring fines or loss of ownership in the future. He asked if a slight anti-gay remark would also be grounds to force an owner to sell his team.

-Clivin Bundy, the embattled rancher fighting federal seizure of his cattle over a grazing dispute, after receiving nationwide government official support, was reported as saying that blacks would have been better off as slaves than living as they live now in their communities. Public support for Bundy has completely disappeared as supporters distance themselves from his cause in fear of being labelled sympathetic to his views.

Yet another example of the dangers of thought control and the destructive consequences of Masonic social engineering. If you don't conform or bow at the altar of Americas false religion and babylonian ideology, you will suffer and be martyred.

-4/28 Micheal Savage reported that a white man stopped his truck to help a kid who had been hit. He was immediately beaten by a mob of blacks and repeatedly kicked in the teeth.

-4/27 the Micheal Berry Show reported that the Liberty Legal Association protested when a 7 yr old student at Hamilton Elementary School was told not to read a Bible in school.

-4/20 Outrage over the remarks of a public Universities commenst about the high number of white students attending college. The President Shepard claimed to want a mandate that would block whites from attending in favor of more minorities to force the student body to reflect the demographics of socceity at large.

The people who seriously wonder why these cases are not publicly denounced, their adherents attacked, or stripped of constitutional rights as in the Sterling or Paula Deen cases have not yet figured out the form of thought control being waged and that the above instances are not discouraged because they are encouraged..

- 5/2 Micheal Savage reported that literally thousands of Black African women are being raped by Muslim gangs and forcibly converted to Islam, yet the White House says Nothing.

-5/5 the Associated Press announced that 276 Nigerian schoolgirls were abducted by muslim extremist group Boko Haran, who claimed that he "would sell your girls in the market place." On 5/12 a video was released showing the girls praying Islamic style and the terrorists proclaiming that they had been converted to Islam. The White House promised to intervene.

Another reason to work for the formation of our own kingdom to protect our people from the coming future in which our national leaders seek to force us into close proximity with enemies who feel justified in committing such atrocifies against us. We already see what and how our leaders act when we speak a word of protest against our enemies. We already see how our leaders encourage our enemies to insult and hate us. Do we really trust them with the security of our families and loved ones??

Political Strategy

A movement without adherents is no movement at all. Before momentum in the political direction we advocate can ever be initiated, we must have a clear concept of what we want and how we can bring it into reality. We must have a vision that we can transmit into the hearts and minds of our people so that they, too, can visualize it. We need writers. We need scholars. We need dreamers. We have a dream.

If you can see the feasibility of this dream, however remote, and though not willing to sacrifice to make it happen, you sympathize with our cause and feel the movement is justified and needed, please write or leave a comment that you are, in fact, a sympathizer. Not a supporter, simply a sympathizer.

Only when significant numbers of people arise who sympathize with our cause can any number of supporters or volunteers be courted to make a difference. We are in the very initial stages of a global movement intending to alter the course of human events, and at this stage, we simply need your voice. Simply an acknowledgement of your approval of our right to exist, and continue forward. That's all.
