

SUGAR BABIES

6-14-14

The other day I happened to catch Nightline on ABC and the story was about Sugar Daddies and Sugar Babies. How can one clamour about women's equality and that women's rights have been completed with things like this flourishing?

I already hear people saying it's a free country and one can choose to do as they please. Fair enough, however, it's one of those sick ironies in life like the right to bear arms and the ongoing and intensifying of School Shootings. Back to sugar though. It talked about two young women who have sugar daddies. A very beautiful young woman will be a "sugar daddy" girlfriend in exchange for lavish gifts and money. Simple enough right? Some are going to college and can't afford the tuition and other stuff.

So they supplement their income by selling themselves. Giving them the benefit of the doubt, these young women don't have sex, still, they are only looked upon as a accessory, eye candy if you will. Is there nothing wrong with this?

Physically no, but what does this say to us on a mental and perceptual way? Our attitudes and views?? Even more far off was the ~~the~~ ^{G.D. UNIT B} ~~PELICAN BAY~~ view that was doing porn in order ~~to~~ ^{and} pay for her college. Again, it's her life but that's not my issue. The issue I have is the overall perception that men harbor towards women and how that perception influences how they act and treat them, how their attitudes towards them (women) stem from such things.

In a simplistic way if one was to be told guy A is a felon, certain conceptions of how he is will pop up. If guy B is shown to be a guy in a business suit people will think highly of him. How does those attitudes come to bear themselves in the psyche of people?

What I'm trying to say is all these backward views of women and the way they get treated continue the pattern of isolating down upon women and singling them out as tools for men's pleasure. Will stopping porn, prostitution, certain language that defines or has to do with women stop rape, sexual abuse etc.,? I can't say and nobody can, especially a society until they put it into practise.
